MISCELLANY.

THE DISOWNER DISOWNED.

'Irene,' said Charles De Forest to his sister, 'I must be blunt, and tell you that Dalton is a scoundrel.'

'Explain yourself,' said she, with proud quickness of tone.

'One could hardly gather it,' he continued, 'from his countenance. He has neither a bad eye or a bad mouth; his face is handsome, and he has by no means a sinister expression; neither can he be called a 'smiling villain,' in short, I hardly know where to find fault with his appearance. His manners as you very well know, are finished and gentlemanly. Yet from the first, I have abhorred this man whom you have chosen. It is impossible for me to define what there is in his countenance that I so much dislike, yet there certainly is something—perhaps I might call it want of soul. Often have I looked for that constant yet flexible smile which usually marks the smooth rascal, for then I should feel sure of being right, but Dalton is far superior in guarding his heart to his lesser brethren in scoundrelism, if indeed he belongs to that class.'

'And so,' exclaimed Irene, 'you dislike Richard Dalton, but cannot define your reason. Because you can see no evil in him, you imagine him a master in deception. Oh, shame on such ungenerous constructions—out of nothing, too!'

'If it were nothing more than my mere suspicions it is very probable that I should have never mentioned them to you, though I confess to some faith to the correctness of instinctive feelings. But a little matter that I saw this morning, makes me sure that he has not a right soul. I had just opened the hall-door, when that pretty little dress-maker of yours, coming down the stairs, met Dalton as he walked out of the drawing room. She hesitated a moment, and blushed deeply, then advanced towards him and frankly held out her hand, exclaiming

'Ah, Richard, I am glad to see you again.'

She did not notice my approach, but Dalton did, and whether he was unwilling for me to know of his acquaintance with a poor seamstress, or from any other cause no matter what, it amounts to the same—he merely bowed, and passed to the door without giving her a cold clasp of the hand. As she went on, I heard distinctly a sigh, almost a half checked sob. She looks like a noble-hearted girl, and at this moment I would prefer her poverty to all of that man's fine prospects. Now, Irene, this is a little affair but very significant, as it seems to me, and it has settled my previous suspicions of Dalton into a firm opinion. Look at it in any light you will, it tells against him.'

She made no reply, and she shortly after left the room.

Irene De Forest was one of those proud, queenly beauties, each of whom seems born to universal rule, excepting over the one to whom she has given her heart and become a fond slave. But let a suspicion of that one's inconstancy or unworthiness cross her mind and the slave becomes at once a jealous tyrant. Irene, the rich heiress, had proved her love for Richard Dalton, in neglecting wealthier suitors for him who was comparatively poor just starting in business with little capital beyond the fine prospects opened in his way by his father's friends. Could a deep affection like hers be bestowed upon an unworthy object? His character was unimpeached: none knew aught against him, and indeed few knew him at all, for he stood in the world seemingly destitute of family connections, and guarded within a reserve which was rarely broken down. She thought that he possessed a powerful mind, and in this she was not mistaken. To her at least he had never seemed to be wanting in heart. With her brother's words came the first tangible suspicion she had ever entertained; for the occasional uneasiness that she felt in seeing his face in a particular light, always momentary, and not worthy of being magnified by that name. Now that she did suspect, no half-explanation, no second-hand proof was sufficient for her, and with the boldness of a will that was always above the conventionalities of life, she determined to satisfy herself and believe only the testimony of her own senses. Her arrangements were made with this in view.

The very next morning she spoke with Charles on the subject, and asked his assistance. Her plan was simply to disguise herself as a young gentleman, to obtain an introduction to Dalton, and seek an intimate acquaintance with him, that she might have a better opportunity of learning his real disposition. In such a case, and with such motives, thought she, the end would certainly justify the means.

'Dear Irene,' said Charles half-angrily, 'this is perfectly ridiculous. I have read of such things in silly romances, but think of a step like this being taken by a sober young lady in sober life! Leave the whole to me, and I will find out all that is necessary without this romantic and useless masquerading.'

'Recollect the importance of such knowledge· consider that the happiness of my whole life hangs upon this one thing, and you will not wonder that I have resolved to see for myself. Could I be satisfied with mere reports and surmises, and indeed ought I to receive such against him? No, no; on this my mind is settled, and we have only to arrange the plan of action. To-morrow, I will go to Baltimore, ostensibly for a month's visit, and you of course will accompany me. We can return on the very next day, I in some disguise—for instance as a young Spaniard, from Havana. My Spanish, they tell me, is good, and I am sure that I can carry out the character. You will introduce me to Dalton as a friend of yours, and it will be strange indeed if I cannot learn him well in a month's close study.'

'Very well; I surrender, of course. Ah, sis, you show taste in selecting the robe of a solemn young Spanish Don, fiercely mustachioed, of course, olive-hued, and strutting along in petty majesty. It will be a rare sight to see you moving around Dalton, and trying for a sly peep into his heart. But I do not believe you will find any within him!'

A few days after this Don Felipe —— was introduced to Dalton. The latter supposed, if indeed he gave any thought to the subject, that it would be no more than a passing acquaintance, and so it would naturally have been, for the two appeared utterly unlike in their disposition. Dalton's mind was too strong for him to seek a stranger for the sake of his noble birth; but when the young Spaniard so evidently sought his intimacy, he gave it, with the impulse felt by every man to return like for like, and partly perhaps for other reasons best known to himself. It seems very odd that the lively stranger should be so anxious to associate with a man of Dalton's reserved temperament, but at all events they shortly became quite intimate, and were rarely seen apart out of business hours. Irene hardly knew what to think. As yet she had seen no evidence of what she feared, and was several times upon the point of throwing off her disguise, but was always prevented by some accidental and momentary expression in his generally immovable face. At last, fortune settled the matter decisively, and to her full satisfaction.

They were going to the theatre one evening, and when a few squares distant, a young man passed them, then suddenly turned and accosted Dalton. The latter wheeled pettishly, with—

'Ah, Henry, I hardly knew you.'

'It is no wonder,' replied the other, quietly. 'Let me speak a word with you.'

As they talked together in a low tone, Don Felipe noticed that the stranger was a finely-formed youth, and very neatly though plainly dressed. His voice seemed full of some emotion, which he vainly strove to conceal, and indeed assumed throughout a tone of indignant superiority. Dalton appeared to be under the constraint of affected ease, and at first studied to speak as inaudibly as possible, until some scornful expression of the other threw him off his guard, and then the conversation became perfectly distinct, so as to be unavoidably heard by any bystander. The listener did not scruple to catch every word after the first few sentences.

'And so you refuse to meet your mother at a Christmas dinner! I never knew before that you disliked to dine out.'

Dalton felt the sarcasm, and replied doggedly:

'I tell you that I am engaged, and if she has lived without me for the last six months, surely she can support my absence for one hour. I will not go.'

'Shame on you, for speaking that truth without a blush! Yes, she has lived without you for the last six months—lived in poverty, too, dependent with my sister upon the slender salary of a poor clerk, while you possess comparatively wealth, where and how obtained you best know. And why is this? You call her vulgar, and too low for the society wherein you move. It is true that she married your father when both were poor; it is true that she has never received a fashionable education, such as she toiled to bestow upon you, but there lives not upon the earth a higher-minded, better woman than my aunt—your mother, Richard Dalton!'

'Pshaw! Why did you not save all this talk, and tell me that you were begging?—give her this if she needs it.'

The young man looked at the bill.

'Five dollars!'

'Yes. Your lecture is more interesting than I generally hear, and I am willing to pay high for a ticket. Better keep it yourself—you have earned it.'

The young man ground it under the heel of his boot.

'I can spare five dollars from my poverty better than you can from your wealth. Take it again—it will not soil your fingers.'

He walked swiftly away, and Dalton turned with an unstifled curse against 'low connections.' The young Cuban was waiting for him with apparent nonchalence, and they entered the theatre together.

Neither paid much attention to the play.—Don Felipe had sufficient material for thought in what he had heard, and Dalton was evidently chafed to the quick. His ordinary composure became undisguised resistless, and several times between the acts, he left his seat for a few moments, until his companion began to suspect that he strove to banish his annoyance with liquor. Yet Dalton betrayed no sign of it in his tones and actions, except perhaps, in a greater freedom of speech than was usual with him. His nervousness gradually wore away, and he became the polished, frank gentleman.

On their return they passed two fashionables, just before the door of a splendid mansion. One of them exclaimed to the other—'Come, let us call on ———, and handle the pictures for an hour or two.'

'Agreed,' said his friend, and they walked in.

Don Felipe had already learned much, but wished to know all, and carelessly threw out a remark by way of sounding—

'This, then, is ———'s famous gambling resort? I have never been in his house at all.'

'Neither do I know much about it,' replied Dalton. 'Still, suppose we also make a short visit, and see how they manage here.

'I had always thought that no strangers were admitted in his place.'

'As to that, there may be difficulty. I have been here once or twice with a friend, and perhaps they will remember my face.'

As they entered, the servant looked first at the young Cuban, and made a motion as if to shut the door; then at Dalton, and opened it at once to its full range. The former noticed the gesture and drew his own conclusions from it, as he followed his companion into the grand saloon.

We will not dwell upon the scenes witnessed there by one who was wholly unsuited to gaze upon them. It was enough to say that Dalton showed himself in his true character of an accomplished and successful gambler. While others looked with admiration upon his skilful play his companion saw in it another proof of his utter depravity. It was no wonder that a man, who lived upon his dexterity at cards, should feel unwilling to support or even visit his mother in her poverty. They finally left the house, Dalton several hundred dollars richer than before—his companion a gainer by far more that amount in knowledge. Their conversation was brief.

'You did not play at all, Don Felipe. Do you never try your fortune.'

'Never so help me heaven, after what I have just seen.'

'I do not understand you,' replied Dalton, coldly;' 'however good night.'

They parted, and the disguised Irene moved slowly forwards, reflecting on what had passed, and thanking Providence for her escape. She felt no sorrow now in the idea of casting off the man she had loved, the man who had evidently received her friendship that he might fleece away her wealth at the gaming table. He was unworthy; had he been inconstant, the task would have been more difficult.

She had not gone far in her course before the same young man who had addressed Dalton a few hours previously, hastily brushed past her. She hesitated a moment and then followed him, determined to see for herself the effects of Dalton's unfilial desertion. Before she felt that her singular act in disguising herself was justified by extreme circumstances; now she would not unmask until an opportunity was opened for repairing the wrong her affianced husband had wrought.

After walking some distance, Henry Dalton entered a small half-comfortable house, and his watcher, gliding past the unshuttered windows, saw his reception, and heard in a few words all that she wished to know. He flung himself into a chair, while a beautiful girl, the same seamstress whose meeting with Richard had given her the first suspicion, removed his hat, pressing a fond kiss on her brother's flashing brow, and a venerable lady in the corner, dropping her work, anxiously enquiring if he had seen her son.

'I have seen him,' was the bitter answer, 'and he refuses to come. More than that; he sneeringly offered me five dollars to pay for his absence. Do not grieve, dear aunt. We three can spend a happy Christmas together as we have before.'

'God forgive him!' was the mother's only remark, accompanied by a sigh.

'He might have spared that last insult,' continued Henry, 'though, Heaven knows I needed even that poor sum. However, I cannot despair of the time to come, for we can do what we have done. Mr De Forest is a kind man to his clerks, and seems very well satisfied with me. I have no fears—come, then, let us be happy for another year.'

'And I too,' said the soft tender voice of his sister 'have good reason to be satisfied. Irene De Forest treats me more like an equal than as a servant, only Richard is to be her husband, and when they are married of course I shall find other employment. He shall not see his cousin, the poor seamstress of his wife.'

'That time will never come, sweet girl, murmured Irene to herself, as she glided away.'

A fortnight ran by, and found the heiress in the sewing-room, seated by the side of her seamstress, pressing her hand tenderly, while tears of joy floated down the poor girl's cheeks. Irene had at once thrown aside all distinction of rank, and found a new friend. They were talking of the past, the present and the future, when the servant announced Dalton's presence in the drawing room. Irene's return had just been made known, and this was his first visit.

'Show Mr. Dalton into this room,' said she quietly.

He started, but obeyed, while the sewing-girl blushed, cast an imploring look upon Irene, and rose to depart.

'Stay a moment, dear Constance.'

She resumed her seat just as Dalton's step was heard upon the stairs. He was wondering no doubt, at the strangeness of her reception, as he opened the door and gracefully extended his hand to the heiress, without noticing her companion.

Irene drew herself scornfully to her full height.

'Mr Dalton, allow me to call your attention to my friend. It is sometime since you have had an opportunity of conversing with your cousin, and I will not mar your interview.'

She sailed slowly past him as he stood in moveless astonishment. A few moments and he left the house, receiving this brief note in the hall:

'It is unnecessary for me to say to Mr Richard Dalton, the gambler and deserter of his mother, anything more than a farewell forever.

Irene De Forest.'

The next morning at the breakfast table, Mr. De Forest casually dropped a remark which proved more interesting to his children than the worthy old gentleman would have believed.

'Our firm is to be enlarged to-day.'

'Enlarged!' cried Charles, with affected horror. 'Not by putting me into the counting room.'

'No indeed,' said his father, laughing; 'I have been a merchant too long not to know that these lazy, half-literary connoisseurs, are the worst possible persons to add a column of figures. You must be content to live as before, until some lucky marriage shall rouse your ambition. Our new partner has been my confidential clerk for some years, and will be as good a business man as there is in the city, and, if I mistake not, he could rival you in your own tastes also He has no capital but his own talents, and the confidence of his senior partners.'

'Pray who may this paragon be?' inquired Charles, indolently.

'Mr Henry Dalton. He will dine with us to-day. No relation to Richard Dalton, however, as that worthy gentlemen himself assured me some time since.'

Mr Dr Forest always disliked Irene's former lover, and had the latter known how much his falsehood had aided his humbler cousin, perhaps he would not have uttered it.

The result of the next three months can easily be conjectured. Charles abruptly said to his sister one evening:

'Irene, I intend to commit matrimony.'

'And who is the luckless lady?'

'Who could it be but your lovely little friend Constance Dalton?'

'And has she nothing to say upon the subject?'

'Nothing more. I intend to ask her brother's consent this very day. Don't blush, Irene. Perhaps he could be bribed by my promising to return the favor. Here he comes and I suppose I must be off. Get through with him as soon as possible, for I shall waylay him in the hall.'

Two hours from this time Henry Dalton left that house the happiest of men.

Good Hint to the Ladies. We know that tobacco chewing, smoking and snuffing, can plead what are called the highest examples in church and state, but these practices all bear the brand of sensuality, selfishness and folly, nevertheless. And therefore we have some advice to give—not to wives, alas! for them, we wouldn't make trouble in families—but to young ladies. We tell you this, young ladies, seriously and because we know it's true. If a suitor for your hand and heart smells of tobacco, you may be sure he is a lazy, selfish being, and will not bear his end of the yoke. Being a slave to himself he will make you one. Give him the 'mitten,' unless you are sure that you are no better than he is, in which case you are perfectly at liberty to throw yourself away upon each other.

A CHAPTER ON FEMALES.

We like to look upon a stout, healthy woman; she is a prodigy in the nineteenth century. Wherever you go you see scores and hundreds of spleeny, sickly, feeble girls, who can hardly muster courage to make their beds, wash their faces, or drive an intruding cow from the yard. Tell them about early rising, fresh air, and healthy exercise, and they heave a sigh as long as the moral law, and about faint away. You expect them to get up before day; to work in the kitchen; to breathe the fresh air of morning! Preposterous and absurd.

They never have seen the sun rise, and would hardly know but the sun continued to shine forever, if it were not for the almanacs, and their grandmothers. No wonder that every year sweeps to the grave so many young women, who have been sickly and effeminate ever since they were born into the world; and death will continue to select them as his victims till they learn their duty and pursue that course which insures health, strength, and long life. Our great-grand-parents lived to great age, and never thought of complaining or lying down to die, till they reached the meridian of life. They were stout, strong, worked like beavers, and never spent the midnight hours in dancing. Instead of being frightened at a little mouse at their feet, a beetle on their necks, or a fly's foot on their arms, in the absence of their fathers and husbands, they would load their guns, shoot bears and catamounts, and keep at bay a party of savages. How have their daughters degenerated? What female is there now-a-days who would not run from a gun even if it had no lock? The ladies of olden times outlived their husbands years and years. How is it now? Widows were few and far between. It was no singular thing for our grandmothers to have three or four husbands in the course of their lives.—Now it is the reverse. Men have about as many wives, diseases have been of late so fatal among the female sex. Do you not know the cause? It is found in listless idleness, inactivity, late hours, thin shoes, muslin dresses; a horror of the fresh morning air, and that detestible stuff, stiched in pink and yellow covers, which is flooding our country. If they will do nothing else, young ladies will sit and read from morning till night that sickly, sentimental, impure, and we will say licentious trash, that is thrown in such abundance from the press. This shrivels the mind, wraps the affections [illegible] and makes the life wretched beyond description. Let females look into the subject and acts like reasonable and accountable beings, and we should see a different state of things. We should hear of no fainting away, no sickly constitutions, no affection of the lungs, no elopements, and no suicides.

Influence of Wealth. It is said that the Carthagenians allowed no man to hold office in the state, unless he was more or less wealthy. It will be remembered that Carthage was a republic and had no hereditary aristocracy. Hence, wealth formed the chief distinction. It might, therefore, be a good rule, that those who had most influence in the state should possess the most political power; that, 'to have a stake in the hedge,' should be deemed a necessary qualification for those who were to govern the state. When a man of wealth accepts an office in the state, his individual property gives additional respectability to his official station.

Rank, talents and eloquence, and learning, and moral worth, all receive respect, but, unconnected with property, they have much less influence in commanding the services of other men. These may attract admiration, but it is property that gives power. Detached from property, their influence is as evanescent as the fragrance of the flowers detached from the soil. It may be true, the soil has little that claims our respect, but still the virtues which the flowers extract from the soil give and maintain their fragrance and their strength. Thus, the clod of wealth, though in itself it adds nothing to individual character, yet, having its influence purified and varied by the channels through which they pass, gives additional beauty and energy to both the public and the private virtues; it imparts firmness to patriotism; it gives a lovelier hue to benevolence, and a more extensive charm to religion. The example of a man of property has a wider influence, and, when exercised in the path of a patriot, a philanthropist, and a Christian, is more likely to be followed. Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.'

Chinese Dainties. A certain Mandarin, Hi-ha-no, a well known epicure, gave an entertainment in the year 1839 to the master of an American vessels at Canton, who had ingratiated himself highly with the former, and to show his great regard for him the Mandarin had provided the choicest delicacies to be had in that part of the world. As ideas differ upon this point we will enumerate a few of these. Sheep's eyes roasted with a sauce of chopped peacock's feet, large green lizards boiled with their eggs, stuffed white mice, which were so carefully prepared that the foreign guest was under the necessity of skinning them as a preparatory act, broiled snakes, and last not least a species of tart about 6 inches long, stuffed, not with almonds or raisins, but with baked earth worms? The Chinese appeared to enjoy these peculiar dishes very highly, although the guest was somewhat 'taken aback' by their appearance.

COLD WATER.

Mr. Editor—Although no advocate of the so called cold water system, in its reckless and charlatanic application, nevertheless, I am most unwilling that so important in auxiliary in the healing art, long since employed by the medical profession and based upon logical principles, should be excluded from the list of therapeutic agencies simply because a few unprincipled men have chosen to constitute it the arena of their fraudulent intermeddlings with human health and life.

That cold water is useful for bathing and to keep the cutaneous surface free from morbid matter, no reasonable person will deny, and in some cases of disease it proves beneficial; for instance, in common and ordinary typhoid fever, with a tendency to enterio and pneumonic complications of a mild form, where little else is required than dietetic treatment. And so with other simple means. A person may be taken with the same symptoms and fever. Some friendly old lady will call in and with a sedate and esculapian countenance approaches the patient, and, after feeling his pulse and enquiring about some other minor symptoms, exclaims, with all the dignity of a thorough medicus, "You have a fever!" On goes the pots and kettles and she deals out her elixir of life,—catmint and pennyroyal. The patient after dosing freely with this herbaceous compound recovers. Now it is just as reasonable to conclude that those remedies will cure every disease as to say that cold water will, for they have both cured the same disease. So they may be compared through the whole category of complaints, and the result will be the same. Nature does the cure and cold water receives all the glory.

If cold water was the only remedial agent for the cure of disease, why did the god of nature institute so many articles of medicine, all of which contain different medicinal properties; such as astringent, demolient, diuretic, narcotic, rubefacient, febrifuge. Now I shall give an impartial analysis of cold water and see if the great catholicon can be found. The first preparation of water is distilled. This is the purest of all water and is composed, eight parts Oxygen and one part Hydrogen. The next in purity is rain water, which has undergone a natural distillation from the earth, and is condensed in the form of rain. Rain water contains oxygen, hydrogen, lime and calcarious matter. The third is spring water. This comprehends all water that springs from some depth below the soil. It is obvious that spring water will be as various in its contents as the substances that compose the soil through which it flows. As a general thing it is composed of earthy salts, which, in by far the greater number of cases, are only the insipid substances, chalk and selenite, which does not impair the taste of water, while the air which it contains, and its grateful coolness renders it a most agreeable and generally a perfectly innocent drink, though sometimes in weak stomachs, it is apt to occasion an uneasy sense of weight in that organ, followed by a degree of dyspepsia. No where can any peculiar medicinal properties in cold water be found.

In the Patriot of the 30th ult. an article appeared purporting to be an apology for an unsuccessful trial of cold water. The writer has admitted the insufficiency of cold water to cure disease, and to make it more plain I will quote his own language: "The fever was very excessive at first, was brought under perfect control, and the dysentery had become nearly cured, yet it was impossible for her to eat enough to gain strength sufficient to overcome the disease," so the patient died.

It is well known to the medical profession, if not to the world, that in all diseases where it has been protracted, and nature has become exhausted, the strength of the patient fails. At this crisis of the disease, stimulants are required, and sometimes the most powerful, to assist nature to overcome disease; now does food and cold water contain this desired remedy? If they do why was not the patient's strength kept up? The writer says, because she could not eat enough. Is it to be supposed that a person emaciated and weakened down by disease, without appetite, can eat food enough to keep up their strength? Preposterous idea! How long will people trifle with their lives? and does not this speak out in thunder tones against the present cold water system? Aqua.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

Mr. Editor:—Whereas, an article has been published in the Herald of the 22d inst., purporting to have given the result of the late trial of skill between the Engines, Tremont 7, of Roxbury, and Niagara 1, of Quincy—but in so doing they have made some misstatements, that in justice to all parties concerned, should be corrected. The only way to give the public a just and satisfactory account of the trial, is to give the report of the impartial committee of 5 that were chosen, as it was publicly given in the hall, before all that were concerned. I would say in behalf of the impartial committee, that it was with a great degree of reluctance, that they consented to give the report published, and would not on any account, if the article had not appeared. Before giving the report, I would say, in behalf of the Niagara Engine Company, No. 1, to 7 of Roxbury, that they have our sincere and heartfelt thanks, for their kind and gentlemanly treatment towards us in all the proceedings of the day.

The Niagara is a new Engine, constructed by Mr Gilbert of Dorchester, on a new and improved plan. Her cylinders are 6 and 1-2 and 1-16th, and was played with 15 inch stroke.

The Tremont 7, of Roxbury, is a Hunneman tub, and her cylenders, one 6 1-2, the other 6 3-8 and 1-16th, and she was played with 16 inch stroke.

REPORT.

1st Trial. Through six hundred feet of hose, tub and tub, 4 minutes, eighty men each. No preference given to either.

2d Trial. Through six hundred feet of hose, tub and tub, 2 minutes, eighty men each. Draw game.

3d Trial. Four hundred feet of hose, each tub draft and play through one inch pipe, men unlimited, 1 and 1-2 minutes, on distance. As far as the play went, in favor of the Niagara four feet two inches.

4th Trial. No. 7 to draft and play through four hundred feet of hose, into No. 1, and she through three hundred feet of hose, with a 1 and 1-8 pipe, three minutes, and then the play reversed. Men unlimited.

At commencing, No. 1 filled within four inches from the top, and when through within 13 and one fourth inches.

Reversed—At commencing, No. 7 filled within four inches from top, and when through within ten inches from top. In favor of No. 1, three and one fourth inches.

Per Order of Committee.

GEN. TAYLOR'S POLITICAL PRINCIPLES.

Mr. Green:—For the information of my fellow whigs, especially those who have not fully decided to vote for any man, good or bad, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, old or young, black or white, qualified or unqualified, on the ground that the regular candidate must at all hazards be supported, a synopsis of Gen. Taylor's political principles are here submitted.

First. General Taylor is 'not an ultra whig.'
Second. He will 'not be the exponent of any party principles.'
Third. He will 'not be the candidate of any party.'
Fourth. He will 'accept no party nominations.'
Fifth. He will 'look to no party doctrines as the rule of his actions.'
Sixth. He will 'express no opinions on any political subject.'
Seventh. 'That the people must take him on their own responsibility.'
Eighth. 'He would as soon accept the nomination from the Democrats as the whigs.'
Ninth. 'He would only accept a nomination of the spontaneous and unanimous voice of the whole people.'
Tenth. 'The South should never agree to the Wilmot proviso.'
Eleventh. 'There should be 'no more field officers North of the Potomac.'

The above, fellow whigs, may not be all of Gen. Taylor's principles, but are those most important to be known, at the present time. I suppose the packed set of log-rollers, office seekers, slave holders and dough faces, who met in convention in the 'Chinese Museum' at Philadelphia constituted to the satisfaction of Zachary Taylor, THE SPONTANEOUS AND UNANIMOUS VOICE OF THE WHOLE PEOPLE.'

Fellow whigs, are the above principles, your principles, you and I have ever been energetic sticklers for principles. We have found fault, with our Democratic friends, because they have constantly adhered to their party nominations. We have remarked repeatedly that, the members of the democratic party, would to a man go for their nominations—that if Gen. Jackson's old 'White Hat' should at any time be the democratic candidate, all would go for it. Now, I ask, shall we take the course we have so long repudiated and strenuously opposed? I believe, I hope not. Our motto has long been 'measures, not men—the country—not individuals,' and shall we at this momentous crisis abandon measures—all our long cherished and dearly loved principles? I am confident your response will be no. Awake, then,' AWAKE! the day of trial, of battle approaches! ON! ON! to the contest 'sink or swim, live or die, go for principles—go for universal liberty.

NEPONSET.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, OCT. 7, 1848.

John A. Green, Editor.

Foreign.—The late arrivals from Europe bring nothing very exciting. Queen Victoria and Prince Albert are visiting in Scotland. Serious disturbances have taken place in Ireland, and some fighting between the insurgents and police; probably originating from the exactions of the landlords rather than from any intention on the part of the people to rebel against the government. On the continent little of importance has happened.

The Dorchester and Milton Bank.—It is stated that a Committee of the Directors of this bank, the cashier of which recently so mysteriously disappeared, have found a deficit of $4700. Mr. Hammond, the missing cashier, it is said, has been seen in New York.

Outrage.—At Dorchester Lower Mills, on Tuesday evening, Dr. Brewer was waylaid on his way home from his store, by a villain, who knocked him down, probably with the intention of robbing him of a small trunk, which he usually carried home at night. A son of the doctor was but a few rods in rear of his father, and had the trunk in his possession, thus foiling the intended object of the highwayman.

The Cholera.—It is contended in England that the cholera does not attack persons who live near breweries or mineral springs, in consequence of the counter influence of carbonic acid gas evolved there. All the watering places with springs that emit this gas escaped the pestilence in Germany, Spain and England. Balston and Saratogo, it is said also escaped.

Santa Anna.—Late accounts from Jamaica state that it is probable that Santa Anna will make that Island his permanent residence. His wife and daughter were studying the English language, and were making considerable progress in their studies. The general and his family were said to be enjoying good health.

Railroads Liable for Damage by Fire.—The Supreme Court at Northampton have given judgment in favor of the Springfield Mutual Insurance Company against the Western Railroad, for the amount of $623 60, with $107 65 interest—the first named sum being the amount paid by the Insurance Company for the burning of a house in 1845, which was set on fire by a locomotive of the Western Railroad.

Boston Water Works.—Wednesday, the 25th inst., is the time assigned (if fair weather) to admit the Cochituate Water into the city. It is contemplated to have a splendid procession, worthy of the city and the occasion, which will be one of the deepest interest to the citizens.

Holden's Dollar Magazine.—The October number of Holden contains a portrait of Rev. Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Readers cannot get a better dollar's worth of reading than to send it to Charles W. Holden, 109 Nassau, N. York, and get his 64 pages once a month.

Clam Chowder.—'Yankee Seth,' of the Palo Alto Saloon will regale his friends, this evening, with clam chowder. All are invited to partake, free of expense, of this epicurean treat. The 'Yankee' we learn, will submit the clams to medical inspection, and none but the healthy ones will be used, therefore you need not fear being made sick. Seth has seen some of the world, New York in particular, has tasted of rare delicacies in his life, and acquired knowledge to make a chowder palatable to all. We shall expect a few bowls, and shall be on hand early.

Notice.—G. W. Warren & Co., of Boston, as will be observed by their advertisement, have received their assortment for the fall season. A good trade can here be made, from an extensive variety of excellent goods.

Democratic Nominations.—The Democrats of this County and District held Conventions at Dedham on the third inst. The County Convention nominated for Senators, Aaron Hobart, Esq. of Wrentham, Isaac Tower of Randolph, and Joel Hunt of Medway. The District Convention nominated on the third ballot, Bradford L. Wales of Randolph for Congress.

Whig Nominations.—The whigs of the Fourth District, have nominated Hon. Benjamin Thompson, of Charlestown, as their candidate for Congress, in place of Hon. John G. Palfrey.

The whigs of Middlesex County have nominated for the State Senate, Tappan Wentworth, of Lowell; A. H. Nelson, of Woburn; John Sargent, of Cambridge; John S. Keyes, of Concord; Hobart Spencer, of Ashly; Chester Adams, of Natick.

The Plymouth County whigs have nominated Hon. William James of Scituate, and Phelander Washburn of Middleboro, as candidates for the Senate.

Effects of the Storm.—The brig Oceanus of Boston went ashore on Scituate beach during the late storm, and remained high and dry at the last accounts. The cargo, principally coffee, will probably be discharged in good order.

Two British schooners, names unknown, are on Ipswich Beach—one is from Pictou, (N. S.) cargo of coal, for Boston, and was going to pieces at the last accounts. The other was from Boston for some port in N ova Scotia.

Another large schooner, also, from Pictou, is ashore on Ipswich Bar.

The barque Panchita, Goodwin, of and for Newburyport, from New York, anchored outside Newburyport Bar Monday, slipped her cables and run in until she brought up on the hemp sands, where she lies in an easy position.

An Excursion. We learn, that the American Engine Company, No. 2, of Weymouth and Braintree, will visit Lynn, on Wednesday Oct. 11th, accompanied by the Brass Band.

About 3000 tons railroad iron have been imported at Portland, within a few weeks, for the Atlantic and St. Lawrence and Augusta railroads.

It is asserted that there exists in Boston, a gambling hell, supported solely by females, among whom are many looked upon as highly respectable.

Hon. Harrison Gray Otis, has addressed a letter to the people of Massachusetts, in which he takes ground decisively in favor of the election of Gen. Taylor.

The Episcopal Convention of New York recently convened, passed a resolution, allowing to Bishop Onderdonk a salary of $2400.

In Boston, during the past summer, the deaths have been about 104 a week, and in New York about 250. The population of Boston is about 125,000; and of New York about 425,000.

The chief of the Philadelphia police, has been suspended, in consequence of a supposed criminal knowledge of West Chester bank robbery.

Shoals of mackerel of all sizes are swarming in the harbor of Halifax. Boys are scooping them up, along the wharves with buckets. They were selling at eight cents a dezen.

The New York Board of Aldermen have appropriated $40,000 for building a small pox hospital on Blackwell's Island.

Hon. Charles Hudson has been re-nominated for Congress by the Whigs of the Worcester District.

C. S. Bogardus, has been appointed Surveyor of the port of New York, vice Michael Hoffman, deceased.

The next State Elections which occur, are those of South Carolina, October, 9th; and Chio and Pennsylvania on the 10th of the same month. The other States vote in November.

All widows of revolutionary soldiers married previous to 1800, are hereafter to draw pensions.

Mrs Frances, wife of Rev. J. N. Maffit, died in Brooklyn on the 29th ult., aged 18 years and 7 months. Mrs. M. was a lady of much personal beauty.

St. John, (N. B.) papers of the 26th inst., state that recent rainy weather had injured the crops of grain and potatoes, and the rot had appeared among the latter generally.

On the night of the 21st 22d, Mr. Bond, the astronomer of the University at Cambridge, obtained observations by which he ascertained the existence of an eight Satelite of the planet Saturn. Till this time this Satelite has been undiscovered, though, Mr Bond has for some time suspected its existence.

There was snow an inch deep, on Saturday, on the Western Railroad, between East Chatham and Washington.

Hon. John A. Dix has accepted the Free Soil nomination for Governor of New York.

War has begun between the Pawnees and Pottowotomies; it was commenced by the former who stole the horses of the latter.

Gen. Kearney is dangerously ill at St. Louis. He has been in feeble health since his return from Mexico. The physicians consider his case very critical.

The number of deaths in Boston in the month of August last, from dysentary and other bowel complaints, was two hundred and seventy-five.

A letter from Vera Cruz says: Boston ice may be had in great abundance at Vera Cruz. Large shipments of it have been made within a few months which will bring in a golden harvest to the owners. The article at this moment is worth fifteen cents a pound in Vera Cruz!

An infant was killed in Phillepsten the other day, while frolicking in a baby-jumper. The spiral spring broke, and falling upon the head of the child, penetrated the skull, and caused almost instant death.

Mr. Stone, who was injured by a stone thrown, from a blast on the Cheshire Railroad, has recovered $3000 damage of the Railroad Company.

The number of Primary School in Boston is one hundred and sixty five.

Commodore James Biddle, U. S. N., died on Sunday evening last at his residence in Philadelphia, at the advanced age of 65 years.

NOTICES.

BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA & TOMATO BITTERS
IMPURITIES OF THE BLOOD.

I wish to impress it particularly upon the minds of those that are troubled with impurities of the blood; bad humors, old ulcers, and diseases brought on by the use of mercury, calomel, that this is a sovereign remedy. It is well known to every physician, that Sarsaparilla is almost the only article that can be successfully used to root out such diseases, and, when mixed with the pure extract of Tomatoes, it has been known to cure such cases where Sarsaparilla alone has had no effect. This can be accounted for from the fact that the Tomatoes operate greatly on the bowels, carrying off all those impurities which, if allowed to remain, create dangerous and incurable diseases. One more proof of the efficacy of the Sarsaparilla and Tomato when combined.

For sale in Quincy by Mrs. E. HAYDEN and CHARLES CLAPP; Braintree, Oliver Perkins; South Braintree, J. Stoddard & Co. Sold also by agents generally. 2w Sept. 30.

FACTS TO BE REMEMBERED.

That Consumption is almost always produced by a cold that might easily be cured. That Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry will cure any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing. That the milder form of Consumption itself is also cured by this Balsam. That it is conceded by many lawyers, clergymen and physicians, that this Balsam has never been equalled for efficacy in all affections of the Lungs and Liver. That scores now rejoice in the possession of good health, who, but for this Balsam, would have been in their graves—having been given up to die by their friends and physicians. Above all, remember that this invaluable medicine has been imitated under various names, and that Dr. Wistar's Genuine Balsam of Wild Cherry only can be relied upon to CURE. It has been warranted to cure Asthma in every stage—what no physician has ever achieved—and has never been known to fail. For delicate health in young females it stands unrivalled—as it does for all diseases of this climate.

THE BEST

NEW VOLUME OF THE

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

THE Publishers of the Scientific American respectfully give notice that the FOURTH YEARLY VOLUME of their Journal will be commenced on Saturday, Sept 23d. This publication differs entirely from the many magazines and papers which flood the country. It is a Weekly Journal of Art, Science and Mechanics, having for its object the advancement of the INTERESTS OF MECHANICS, MANUFACTURERS and INVENTORS. Each number is illustrated with from five to TEN original ENGRAVINGS OF NEW MECHANICAL INVENTIONS, nearly all of the best inventions which are patented at Washington being illustrated in the Scientific American. It also contains a weekly list of American Patents; notices of the progress of all Mechanical and Scientific Improvements; practical directions on the construction, management and use of all kinds of MACHINERY, TOOLS, etc; Essays upon Mechanics, Chemistry and Architecture; accounts of Foreign Inventions; advice to Inventors; Rail Road Intelligence, together with a vast amount of other interesting, valuable and useful information. The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is the most popular journal of the kind ever published, and of more importance to the interest of MECHANICS and INVENTORS than any thing they could possibly obtain! It is printed with clear type on beautiful paper, and being adapted to binding, the subscriber is possessed, at the end of the year, of a large volume of

Four Hundred and Sixteen Pages,

Illustrated with upwards of

Five Hundred Mechanical Engravings,

And an Index.

Terms—Two dollars a year, in advance, or if desired, one dollar in advance, the remainder in six montes. TO CLUBS—5 cpies, $8; ten copies, $15. Those who wish to subscribe have only to enclose the amount in a letter, directed to

MUNN & Co.,

Publishers of the Scientific American,

New York.

ALL LETTERS must be POST PAID.

VOLUME THIRD bound, $2,75, or in sheets, $2, are for sale. They may be sent safely to any part of the country. Patents secured and Mechanical Drawings executed at the cheapest rates, at the office of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

Dr. S. Arnold's Balsam,

A SURE and safe remedy, and is warrented to cure in less than one hour in their first stages, and in a short time in any stage of the disease, or the money will be refunded, cholera morbus or real spasmodic

Cholera, Dysentery and Diarrhœa.

My agents stand ready at all times to make good those assertions. It is also used with entire success for

Tooth-Ache and Burns,

The pain of which it soon relieves, and heals the burn in a short time without leaving a scar. Also the compound, vegetable, sodorific, physical

PILLS.

They are a pleasant, efficient, aperient, mild, gentle,

Efficacious Cathartic,

safe at all times and under all circumstances. They will be found to excel in jaundice, costiveness, headache, and all bullious and feverish habits, operating without pain or sickness to the stomach. The above medicine is worthy the notice of travellers and seafaring people. Price only 25 cents.

For sale in Quincy by Mrs. E. HAYDEN, and by agents throughout the County.

The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No. 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES

Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc. etc. yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.

The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.

THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.

The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.

The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.

The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

NORFOLK COUNTY

Health Insurance Company.

Capital $50,000.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.

Gen. H. A. S. DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for support. When SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casualty disabled MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—from the age of fifteen to forty five years:

Paying $3 a year, draw $2 weekly.

The above Rates are for one year. Insurance can be effected with this Company for two and three years at a small additional premium—no payment is to exceed $400 in any one year.

FEMALES insured for one year only.

Ages fifteen to forty-five.
Paying $2,50 per year, draws $1,50 per week.

POETRY

For the Quincy Patriot.

LIBERTY SONG.

Huzza for Van Buren, huzza!
For Adams and Liberty, on!
For Justice united with Law,
And favors exclusive to none,
None, none,
And favors exclusive to none.

As freemen we claim for our right
Free Soil for our children to till,
For slav'ry let demagogues fight,
Our motto is, 'Liberty still,'
Still, still,
Our motto is, 'Liberty still.'

The men who would fetter our soil,
Dishonor our Patriots' graves;
The men who discourage free soil,
Themselves are of mammon the slaves,
Slaves, slaves,
Themselves are of mammon the slaves.

To winnow the wheat from the chaff,
To prune the political tree,
To labor in freedom's behalf,
We call for the aid of the free,
Free, free,
We call for the aid of the free.

Ye sons of the Pilgrims unite,
The old Declaration sustain;
Equality's every man's right,
Contend for the Charter again,
'Gain, 'gain,
Contend for the Charter again.

The spirit of Liberty cries,
Beware of foul slavery's blight,
Be firm for the blessings you prize,
And never surrender the right,
Right, right,
And never surrender the right.

Huzza for Van Buren, huzza!
For Adams and Liberty, on!
For Justice united with Law,
And favors exclusive to none,
None, none,
And favors exclusive to none,—Huzza.

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

TO ELOISE.

Not in the crowd where wine and song,
And idle jests go round,
Do I, beloved, think of thee
To whom my soul is bound.

Nor 'mid the gay and thoughtless throng
Whose words, like bubbles blown,
No sooner spoken are than lost,
Do I thy spirit own.

But in the calm and quiet hours,
I think alone of thee;
While dew-drops sparkle on the flowers,
And stars shine on the sea.

And as the wave reflects the moon
When all the winds are still—
Thy memory shining on my heart,
Thine image place doth fill

THE FRENCHMAN'S PITY

A beggar, crippled, starved and blind,
Rehearsed his doleful story
To half a score of auditors,
Who all looked vastly sorry.

Some pitied much, some very much,
Some very much indeed!
But not one cent did they bestow
To help the man of need.

At length a Frenchman forward stepped
In pity half, half choler,
And emptying his purse—"by gare!
I pity you two dollar!"

ANECDOTES.

"Is a man and his wife both one?" asked the wife of a certain gentleman in a state of stupefaction, was holding his aching head with both hands. "Yes, I suppose so," was the reply. "Well then," said she, "I came home drunk last night, and ought to be ashamed of myself." This back-handed rebuke from a long suffering, but affectionate wife effectually cured him of his drinking propensity.

"Does your arm pain you much, sir?" asked a young lady of a gentleman who had seated himself near her in a mixed assembly, and thrown his arm across the back of her chair and slightly touched her neck. "No, miss, it does not, but why do you ask?" "I noticed it was considerably out of place, sir," replied she, "that's all." The arm was removed.

Not long since an honest but somewhat unsophisticated farmer accepted an invitation to dine at a fashionable hotel, where Champagne, and a plentiful supply of ice-cream appeared with the dessert. Our friend gave no evidence that either of those articles was at all unpalatable until he had finished and was about rising from the table. At this point, he gravely remarked, "your cider is very good, but as to your pudding, it is —— cold stuff."

"A splendid triumph of science," said Mr. Muggins to his wife; "a Mr. Hartford has given a boy a new lip, which he took from his cheek." "That's nothing, pa; I saw the new doctor take two from our Patty's cheek the other day, and the operation did not seem to be painful either."

A young lady 'down east' who thang 'alto' in one of the churches, had been at a boarding school for half a quarter, and came home perfectly amazed that her papa did not dine at 'chew' o'clock, always spoke of 'tschewty' and made frequent allusions to an old lady who the ancients knew as dame 'Gratischude.' A favorite anthem, much performed by the choir, commenced, 'Turn O Lord, O, turn away!' which she chanted 'Tschurn, O Lord, O tschurn away!' much to the edification of the congregation, most of whom were interested in the dairy business.

'Jack,' said one sailor to another, 'I don't want to hurt your feelings, but shiver my timbers if I don't believe you stole my watch.'

Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of

Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all

Diseases of the Blood,

such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated

Dandelion Panacea,

an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibilious remedy on record.

Oleum Jecoris Aselli,

Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,

For Coughs, Bronchetis, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.

The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

THE existence of the innumerable diseases which afflict the human race, appear to be WHOLLY CONCENTRATED, in regard to Malignity, Pain and Distress, in comparatively few in number. For instance, CONSUMPTION and SCROFULA, are either of them particularly horrifying to the feelings of even a careless observer; and to the patient themselves, they are the very realization of a DEATH STRUGGLE.

No Human Science has heretofore been enabled to extirpate these fearful complaints, and it was only by rhturning to the Simple Resources of the Natural KingJom, that success has been afforded. BRANTS INDIAN REMEDIES never have failed to help and cure the sufferer, as is

MISCELLANY.

MAKING AN APPEARANCE.

'What do you intend to bring your son Charles up to, my dear madam?' said Dr. Turner to Mrs. Watkins, whose husband, an old friend of the doctor's, died recently.

'I am quite undecided,' she answered; "Charles does not appear to have a preference for any thing in particular, and I should rather prefer a profession for him; but, as that will be attended with considerable expense, I fear, quite beyond my means, I must be content that he follow some genteel occupation——'

'Writing is a lawyer's office, or serving behind a druggist's counter, for instance,' interrupted the doctor, impatiently. 'Genteel occupation! nonsense; give him a trade, my dear madam; give him an occupation at his finger's ends, and then he will be independent of that spirit-destroying misery, keeping up an appearance!'

'But surely, doctor,' exclaimed Mrs. Watkins, 'you do not disapprove of people making a genteel appearance in the world? Trade is so low—and I must say, as his dear father was a respectable chemist, I should not like to see Charles descend below that.'

'Descend, indeed!' returned the doctor; 'now, Jane,' for, in his anxiety to set the good lady right, he threw off his ordinary formality, and addressed her in a style that his long friendship for her husband might warrant; 'now Jane, how can you talk such nonsense? Does a tailor or a shoemaker descend by practising his handicraft to earn his bread, any more than I descend by visiting my patients to earn mine?

'You have known me many year, it is true, but you never heard, perhaps, the hard struggles I had to make before I was enabled to rise in my profession. It is not ability alone which ensures success to the professional aspirant; without patronage, talent is almost a dead letter. It takes a little fortune to educate a youth for any of the professions, and another fairly to start him in the world. Without money and influential connexions, one had better be a common laborer than a professional man.

'When I left college and entered on my wordly career, I had all the ardor of a youthful and sanguine mind, added to a real love of the healing art. I married a young and beautiful girl, she was good also—but she had not a penny, and my own fortune was small. As I felt my inability, with the limited means I possessed, to compete with doctors long established in the metropolis, I decided on trying my fortune in one of the provincial towns. I took a good house, and furnished it in a handsome style; put a brass-plate on the door, engraved with 'Doctor Turner,' in large letters; engaged a pew at church; hired a tall boy, whom I put in drab livery, and was only withheld from setting by my pill-box by the conviction that my finances would not stand it.

'Well, during the excitement of making these preparations, our spirits kept pace with our exertions; but when all was completed, and the circulars distributed, we found abundant time to calculate the deep inroad we had made on our slender means.

'We kept up a good heart, however, and every morning I left the house regularly at ten o'clock, not to visit my patients, though I would fain have the neighbors think so. Week after week passed away; these at length grew into months, and still I could obtain no practice. I had made a grand mistake in commencing where I was an utter stranger, and in a provincial place, too. I should have had a far better chance in London; and I could now easily foresee that I should have to wait until some lucky event might bring my capabilities into notice.

MISCELLANY.

MAKING AN APPEARANCE.

'What do you intend to bring your son Charles up to, my dear madam?' said Dr. Turner to Mrs. Watkins, whose husband, an old friend of the doctor's, died recently.

'I am quite undecided,' she answered; 'Charles does not appear to have a preference for any thing in particular, and I should rather prefer a profession for him; but, as that will be attended with considerable expense, I fear, quite beyond my means, I must be content that he follow some genteel occupation——'

'Writing is a lawyer's office, or serving behind a druggist's counter, for instance,' interrupted the doctor, impatiently. 'Genteel occupation! nonsense; give him a trade, my dear madam; give him an occupation at his finger's ends, and then he will be independent of that spirit-destroying misery, keeping up an appearance!'

'But surely, doctor,' exclaimed Mrs. Watkins, 'you do not disapprove of people making a genteel appearance in the world? Trade is so low—and I must say, as his dear father was a respectable chemist, I should not like to see Charles descend below that.'

'Descend, indeed!' returned the doctor; 'now, Jane,' for, in his anxiety to set the good lady right, he threw off his ordinary formality, and addressed her in a style that his long friendship for her husband might warrant; 'now Jane, how can you talk such nonsense? Does a tailor or a shoemaker descend by practising his handicraft to earn his bread, any more than I descend by visiting my patients to earn mine?

'You have known me many year, it is true, but you never heard, perhaps, the hard struggles I had to make before I was enabled to rise in my profession. It is not ability alone which ensures success to the professional aspirant; without patronage, talent is almost a dead letter. It takes a little fortune to educate a youth for any of the professions, and another fairly to start him in the world. Without money and influential connexions, one had better be a common laborer than a professional man.

'When I left college and entered on my wordly career, I had all the ardor of a youthful and sanguine mind, added to a real love of the healing art. I married a young and beautiful girl, she was good also—but she had not a penny, and my own fortune was small. As I felt my inability, with the limited means I possessed, to compete with doctors long established in the metropolis, I decided on trying my fortune in one of the provincial towns. I took a good house, and furnished it in a handsome style; put a brass-plate on the door, engraved with 'Doctor Turner,' in large letters; engaged a pew at church; hired a tall boy, whom I put in drab livery, and was only withheld from setting by my pill-box by the conviction that my finances would not stand it.

'Well, during the excitement of making these preparations, our spirits kept pace with our exertions; but when all was completed, and the circulars distributed, we found abundant time to calculate the deep inroad we had made on our slender means.

'We kept up a good heart, however, and every morning I left the house regularly at ten o'clock, not to visit my patients, though I would fain have the neighbors think so. Week after week passed away; these at length grew into months, and still I could obtain no practice. I had made a grand mistake in commencing where I was an utter stranger, and in a provincial place, too. I should have had a far better chance in London; and I could now easily foresee that I should have to wait until some lucky event might bring my capabilities into notice.

'Wearily and dearily passed the time. My poor wife (I should have sunk without her soothed my disappointment with unabating tenderness; she was never tired of prognosticating ultimate success.

'As for me, I was sometimes well nigh frantic. Oh! the wearisomeness of having nothing to do! I envied the daily laborer as he went to his daily toil, and felt that I would willingly have changed places with the baker or the butcher, as they went their morning round. I was worse off than the apothecary over the way, because, being a physician, my fee was an obstacle to my being consulted by any but gratis patients, to whom I gave audience every morning from eight till ten.

'And then the imperative necessity of maintaining servants of whom we had little need, and of incurring the thousand expenses of keeping up an appearance, and which we could ill afford, drove me nearly to despair. Our means were fast diminishing, and we began to contemplate making some reduction is our establishment, which would have been infallibly the death-blow to all our hopes and wishes.

'Six months had elapsed since we had launched our little bark on the stormy ocean of the world, and never yet had my hand tingled at the touch of a fee, when, one evening, the waiter from the head hotel came hastily to my door, and inquired for 'the doctor.' You may be sure I did not keep him waiting, and he begged me to come as quickly as possible to a lady, who had been taken suddenly ill, as, in company with her husband, she was passing through the town.

'I accompanied the man on the instant, and on being ushered into the bed-room, perceived that my patient was suffering under an attack of influenza. Her husband, who was in a state of extreme excitement, besought me to exert my utmost endeavors to restore his wife to health quickly, as their journey was one on which much depended, and great evil might arise from their delay. I assured him that I would do my best, but that the disease was one which required a good management and patience; as, if it improperly treated, it might terminate fatally.

'This complaint had been making sad hacoc among our town's people, and their doctors had reaped golden harvests from their method of treating it—in some instances, contriving to keep their patients for weeks, and even months, on their list, while many invalids exchanged the sick bed for the grave.

'The means I adopted with my patient were altogether different from those pursued in similar cases, so that the next day the lady was much relieved, while her husband shook my hand with grateful warmth, and protested that the effects of my skill were absolutely magical.

'In a few days the travellers were able to continue their journey, leaving me weighty proofs of their satisfaction.

'But these were light, compared to the benefit I derived from this successful cure. The story spread abroad with inconceivable rapidity, my reputation was established at once, and patients innumerable flocked to my consultation room.

'Our troubles were at an end; one lucky chance had rent the cloud that had hitherto obscured our horizon, and the tide of fame sat in with a rapid current. But it was a mere chance: had it not occurred, vain had been all our efforts—fruitless our struggles; we must shortly have sunk into poverty and obscurity.

'I am now independent; but I declare, that were my time to come over again, I would choose some handicraft by which to obtain a livelihood, rather than again encounter the horrors of being compelled to keep up an appearance on insufficient means.'

HOME, SWEET HOME.

I am anxious to say a few words about Home. The song tells us 'there is no place like' it. And the song is right. But how few homes there are in the world! Or how many 'homes are no homes?' It is enough to make a person sick to think of it. Not one home in ten is deserving of the name. And what wonder? Look at it.

A young man meet a pretty face in the ball-room, falls in love with it, courts it, 'marries' it, goes to housekeeping with it,—and boasts of having a home to go to, and a wife. The chances are nine to ten that he has neither. His pretty face soon gets to be an old story—or becomes faded or freckled, or fretted,—and as that face was all he wanted, all he 'paid attention to,' all he sat up with, all he bargained for, all he swore to 'love, honor and protect,'—he gets sick of his trade; knows a dozen faces which he likes better; gives up staying at home evenings; consoles himself with cigars, oysters, whiskey-punch and politics; and looks upon his 'home' as a very indifferent boarding-house. A family of children grow up about him; but neither he nor his 'face' knows anything about training them; so they come up helter skelter,—made toys of when babies, dolls when boys and girls; drudges when young men and women; and so passes year after year, and not one quiet, happy, hearty, homely hour is known throughout the whole household.

Another young man became enamored of a 'fortune.' He waits upon it to parties, dances the polka with it, exchanges billet doux with it, pops the questien to it, gets 'yes' from it, is published to it, takes it to the parson's, weds it, carries it home, sets up an establishment with it, introduces it to his friends, and says poor devil, that he too is married, and has got a home. It's a lie. He is not married, and has no home. And he soon finds it out. He is in the wrong box, but it is too late to get out of it. He might as well hope to escape from his coffin. Friends congratulate him, and he has to grin and bear it. They praise the house, the furniture, the cradle, the cupboard, the new bible, the newer baby, and then bid the 'fortune' and him who 'husbands' it, good morning. Good morning! As if he had known a good morning since he and that gilded 'fortune' were falsely declared to be 'one.'

Take another case. A young woman is smitten with a pair of whiskers. Curled hair never before had such charms. She sets her cap for them. They take. The delighted whiskers make an offer, first one, then the other, proffering themselves both in exchange for her one heart. The dear miss is overcome with such magnanimity, closes the bargain, carries home her prize, shows it to her pa and ma, calls herself engaged to it, thinks there was never such a pair [of whiskers] before, and in a few weeks they are married. Married! Yes the world call it so, and we will. What is the result? A short honey-moon, and then the unlucky discovery that they are as unlike as chalk and cheese, and not to be made one, though all the priests in Christendom pronounced them so.

There are many other kinds of ill assorted 'marriages' and they all result in unhappy 'homes.' What else could be expected? Young folks get their ideas of the holiest relation of life from the novel. Or when this is not the case, they, in most instances, have no ideas at all of it, but are governed in their choice and conduct by their feelings, their passions, or their imagined interests. Thus the marriage union is prostituted throughout the civilized world, and the terrible retribution is seen in myriads of discordant and disordered households. Home, which should be the most beautiful of places is shunned by thousands as a pest house. Children finding no enjoyment beneath the parental roof, seek for it in places of public resort, become corrupted in their manners and morals, and are ruined. To this cause more than to almost any other, can be traced the immorality of our youth. Look at this town. See the hundreds of dirty-faced brats which swarm our streets, and insult every passer by with impunity! Have they homes which are homes? No. They have places where they stay o' nights, eat, get scolded, and whipped; but as for the purifying influence of home, they are strangers to it. Their [illegible] light and darkness are one, or fire and powder. It is so in all our towns. It is so everywhere.

Oh what a delight it is,—if it were only for the rarity of the thing, to enter a house, where husband and wife are one, and the whole family are united together in bonds of love! There always is peice, there always is heaven itself. Sorrow there will be, of course, for shade is every where as inevitable as sunshine; but alike in sorrow and in joy,—possibly more in sorrow than in joy,—the true home, the home which is home, is a scene of the utmost beauty. It is this pure domestic influence which the world mainly needs for its purification. These noisy sects, these swelling parties, these conceited orator, may all do a required work,—but the one thing needful is the calm, serene, yet resistless influence of home. Show me a family of children brought up in the pure atmosphere of such a place; led into the paths of light and love by a kind mother; directed to scenes of honorable ambition by a wise father; disciplined in all the affections by the sweet intercourse of brothe and sister, and the offices of good neighborhood; and you show me a family whose characters will do more towards elevating the moral sentiment of the community, and unloosing its bands of wickedness, than could be effected by all the organizations into which poor human nature has ever been dove-tailed. Lynn Pioneer.

THRILLING ADVENTURE.

We heard the other day a story related by an old sailor, Capt. Jacob ——, which made a great impression on us, and which we wish we could repeat with the unction and nautical phraseology of the worthy narrator.

It occured during the last year. The Captain, who was a native of Plymouth, (Mass.) was runing on the coast in a schooner laden with flour. He had nearly reached his destination, when he was overhauled by one of the enemy' frigates, who ordered him peremptorily to have a line abroad.

There was no resisting the command, for the schooner was without arms, and the tender full of marines and sailors armed to the teeth with pistols muskets and cutlasses. The captain had a light but fair breeze aloft his sails, and he was driving on to a reef, the entrance to which he was perfectly familiar with and once inside which, he was sure of making port, undisturbed by the tender.

In this view he ordered one of the men forward with the line, and in a clear, stentorian voice perfectly audible on board the tender, sang out:

'Heave your line aboard!' then added he, solo voice so as to be heard only by his men. 'Heave it short!'

The Yankee sailor caught the hint, and hove according to directions. The end of the line splashing in the water.

High above the execrations of the English officer commanding the tender, rose the roar of the indignant Yankee skipper.

'Is that the way you heave a line, you lubberly son of a land-crab? Heave the line in shape, or I'll cut your liver out! Heave it short.

Again the line fell short and the English officer and the Yankee captain vied with each other in showering imprecations and invectives on the head of the blundering 'landlubber.' Meanwhile the breeze was freshening and the schooner drawing nearer the reef.

Again and again the order to heave was given, with the same undertone addition, and the same result.

The Englishman began to smell a rat, and just as the Yankee captain threw himself flat on the deck, and made his men do the same, the report of a dozen muskets was heard, and a shower of bullets came whizzing through the rigging.

'Let em fire and be d—d!' said the captain, 'I'll show them a clean pair of heels.

And taking his tiller between his heels, as he lay upon the deck, he run the schooner cleverly inside the reef.

They were soon out of gun-shot from the baffled tender. Up went the stars and stripes, with a hearty cheer from the marines, and the old one eyed sea-god pulled out a rusty fife, and gave them Yankee Doodle in strains as melodious as the triumphant notes of a porker that has escaped the butcher's knife. Captain Jacob saved his bacon and flour too. Yankee Blade.

FRENCHMAN STUDYING ENGLISH.

Frenchman. Ha, my good friend, I have met with one difficulty—one very strange word. How you call H-o-u-g-h?

Tutor.—Huff.

Frenchman. Tres bien, Huff, and Snuff you spell S-n-o-u-g-h, ha!

Tutor. O no, no; Snuff is S-n-u-double-f. The fact is words in ough are alittle irregular.

Frenchman. Ah, very good. 'Tis beautful language. H-o-u-g-h is Huff. I will remember; and C-o-u-g-h is Cuff. I have one bad Cuff, ha!

Tutor. No that is wrong. We say Kauff, not Cuff.

Frenchman. Kauff, eh bien. Huff and Kauf, and, pardonnes moi, how you call D-o-u-g-h—Duff, ha?

Tutor. No, not Duff.

Frenchman. Not Duff? Ah! oui; I understand, it is Dauf, hey?

Tutor. No, D-o-u-g-h spells doe.

Frenchman. Doe! It is very fine; wonderful lanouage it is. Doe; and T-o-u-g-h is toe, certainment. My beefstake was very toe.

Tutor. O no, no; you should say Tuff.

Frenchman. Tuff? And the thing the farmer uses, how you call him, P-l-o-u-g-h? Pluff, ha! you smile, I see I am wrong, it is Plauf? No! ah, then it is plee, like Doe; it is beautiful language, ver' fine—ploe?

Tutor. You are still wrong, my friend. It is plow?

Frenchman. Plow! Wonderful language. I shall understand ver' soon. Plow, Doe, Kauf; and one more—R-o-u-g-h, what you call General Taylor; Rauf and Ready? No! certainment it is Row and Ready.

Tutor. No! R-o-u-g-h spells Ruff.

Frenchman. Ruff, ha! Let me not forget. R-o-u-g-h is Ruff, and B-o-u-g-h is Buff, ha!

Tutor. No, Low.

Frenchman. Ah! 'tis ver' simple, wonderful language, but I have had what you call E-n-o-u-g-h! ha! what you call him?

THE ADVANTAGES OF PARTNERSHIPS.

Capital is rendered more product ve by the formation of partnerships. It would often be very convenient if a merchant could be in two places at the same time. But this cannot be done. If, however, there are two or three partners in a firm, these partners may be in distant places, and thus the interests of the whole may be properly attended to. By dividing their business into distinct branches, and each partner superintending a branch, the business may flourish as much as if the establishment belonged to one individual, who had the convenient attribute of ubiquity. One partner may superintend the town department—the other, the country; one the manufacturing; the other, the selling branch; one the books; the other, the warehouse; and by this division of labr, each branch of the business will have the dvantage of being constantly under the supe ntendence of a principal of the firm. Anoter advantage is, that by mutual discussion on their affairs, the concern will be conducted with more discretion. The ignorance of one may be supplied by the knowledge of the other; the speculative disposition of one may be re trained by the phlegmatic disposition of the other; the carelessness of one may be counteracted by the prudence of the other. But the great advantage arising from partnerships is, that capital accumulates faster; there can be a greate division of labor in a large establishment; here will be less proportionate expense; the fir will be able to gain a greater amount of credit and more confidence will be placed in their hon and integrity. It is very rare that a dishones failure is made by a firm. Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

Said a Western edit with dignified emphasis, 'I hold it as a self vident principle that no man should take a pa per three consecutive years, without at least m king an apology to the editor for not paying f it.'

What Constitutes a Gentleman? 'Halloo, you man with a pail and frock,' said a British officer as he brought his fiery steed to a stand in front of Governor Crittenden's dwelling, 'can you inform me whether his honor, the Governor of Vermont resides here?'

'He does,' was the responce of the man, still wending his way to the pig sty.

'Is his honor at home?' continued the man of spurs.

'Most certainly,' replied the man of the frock.

'Take my horse by the bit, then, said the officer, 'I have business to transact with your master.'

Without a second bidding, the man did as requested, and the officer alighted and made his way to the door and gave the pannel several hearty raps with the butt of his whig—for be it known, in those days of republican simplicity, knockers and bells, like servants, were in but little use. The good dame of the house answered the summons in person; and having seated the officer and ascertained his desire to see the Governor, departed to inform her husband of the guest's arrival; but on ascertaining that the officer had made a hitching post of her husband, she immediately returned and informed him that the Governor was engaged in the yard, and could not very well wait upon his honor and his horse at the same time! The predicament of the officer can be better imagined than described.

Retiring from Business. It is much to be regretted that people who have realized a little money by trade should retire and take out their capital, and thus reduce the commercial capital of the country. What reason can you assign for this? You say you are independent: go on, get wealthy. You say you are wealthy: go on and get more wealth. The more wealth you get, the more you serve your country, and the greater power you have of doing good to others. You say you are getting old: take a young partner; do you find capital and knowledge, and let him find labor and activity. You say you have toiled long enough; you wish to retire and enjoy yourself. Retirement will be no enjoyment to you: to a man of charnes. The most effectual means you can adopt to make yourself wretched, and to shorten your days, will be to place yourself in a situation where you will have nothing to do. But you say, you think it will be more respectable to be out of business—to have an establishment like a nobleman—and to induce your sons and daughters into fashionable society. Oh, if that is the reason, by all means go: if you have become so high that you look down upon your business, the sooner you leave it the better. Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

Mercantile Justice. The more nations are commercial, the more honest they are in dealings. Half civilized nations, who have no idea of commerce, are proverbial for their dissimulation, treachery, and fraud. But when the individuals of any country have dealings with each other in trade, they necessarily acquire correct ideas of the principles of equity and the rights of property; and the public proclaims that you violate justice when you give your laborers less wages than their due; when you take advantage of the inexperience or inadvertence of your customers; when your goods are of inferior quality, or when you do not abide by your agreement. You also violate justice when you engage in speculations, the profits of which if unsuccessful, will fall upon your creditors. You violate justice when you provide comforts for your family, or use hospitality towards your friends, or bestow charity on the poor at other peoples' expense. A virtue that cannot be exercised, but by a violation of justice is no longer a virtue. Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

'Human Nature.' When a wild spark attempts to steal a kiss from a Nantucket girl, she says, 'come sheer off, or I'll split your mainsail with a typhoon.'

The Boston girls hold still until they are well kissed, when they flare up at once, and say, 'I think you ought to be ashamed.'

When a young chap steals a kiss from an Albany girl, she says, 'I reckon it's my turn now,' and gives him a box on the ear that he don't forget for a month.

When a clever fellow steels a kiss from a Louisiana girl, she smiles, blushes deeply and says nothing.

In Pennsylvania, when a female is saluted with a buss, she puts on her bonnet and shawl, and answereth, 'I am astonished at thy assurance, Jedediah, and for this indignity will sew thee up.'

The western ladies, however, are so fond of kissing, that when saluted on one cheek, they instantly present the other.

The Sag Harbor girl tussles and scratches till out of breath, when she submits to her fate with the most exemplary fortitude and resignation without a murmur.

When a young man steals a kiss from a Lowell girl, she blushes like a 'new blown rose,' and says smartly—You darsn't do that twice more.'

Economy. A sound economy is a sound understanding brought into action. It is calculation realized; it is the doctrine of proportion reduced to practice; it is forseeing contingencies and providing against them; it is expecting contingencies and being prepared for them. Hannah More.

DREAMS. Dreaming, as the precursor and accompaniment of diseases, deserves continued investigation, not because it is to be considered as a spiritual divination, not because the unconscious language often very clearly shows to those who can comprehend its meaning, the state of the patient. According to Albert, lively dreams are in general a sign of the excitement of the nervous action. Soft dreams are a sign of slight irritation of the brain; often a nervous fever announcing the approach of a favorable crisis. Frightful dreams are a sign of determination of blood to the head. Dreams about blood and red objects are signs of inflammatory conditions. Dreams about rain and water are often signs of diseased mucous membranes and dropsy. Dreams in which the patient sees any part of the body especially suffering, indicate disease of that part. Dr. Forbes Winslow's Journal of Psychological Medicine.

LETTER FROM HORACE MANN.

WEST-NEWTON, Sept. 23d, 1848.

GENTLEMEN:—I have received with lively emotions of gratitude a copy of Resolutions passed at a District Convention held at Dedham on the 19th inst., from one of which it appears that I was unanimously nominated by the Convention as their candidate for the thirty-first Congress of the United States.

From another of the resolutions communicated to me, it appears that my 'independent position in regard to the Presidential candidates' was distinctly recognized by the Convention, and that I received their nomination, not in consequence of that position, 'but in spite of it.' I assure you, gentlemen, that this is a far more distinguished mark of your confidence than I could have anticipated, and greater than my sense of my own imperfections would ever have allowed me to hope for. When I wrote to my constituents the letter of the 22th ult., I believed that my duty to the State, as Secretary of the Board of Education, was paramount to my obligations to any political party; and therefore, lest my identification with any such party should neutralize my influence in the cause of education, or expose my connection with it to misconstruction, I chose to withdraw altogether from the political arena. I did not anticipate that I should be acceptable to either party, without giving a party pledge, and any such pledge, while acting as Secretary, I felt bound to withhold. The events of the present week, however, have put a new aspect upon the case, and have changed my relations to it entirely. Two Conventions have met, honestly differing from each other in regard to measures (though I trust not in regard to principles,) and by both of these I have been unanimously nominated for re-election. As both nominations have been made since my own course was specifically defined, and were made with a full understanding of that course, I consider that the ground on which I placed my withdrawal has been taken away. It is hardly necessary to add that I shall now consider myself under increased obligations (if possible) to abide by the determination expressed in my letter of the 28th August, on the subject of any agency in the pending canvass. This is now due not only to the cause of education, but to my own consistency.

The Convention you have the honor to represent was pleased to refer to my views respecting the institution of slavery. Some of these views were partly expressed in the remarks made by me in the House of Representatives on the 30th of June last; in the letter to my constituents before referred to, and in my arguments before the Criminal Court of the District of Columbia, in the 'Pearl' cases (not yet reported.) These and kindred views, I shall improve all fitting opportunities that I may ever enjoy, to enlarge upon and enforce; and had I the tongue of an angel or the pen of inspiration, I believe I could use them up on no holier theme than in kindling abhorrence at the wrongs suffered by the slave, and in melting the universal heart of humanity into pity for his lot; for I hold it to be impossible for the soul of a slave—benighted, strangled and buried alive as it is—ever fully to know and feel the joys of that spiritual liberty wherewith Christ maketh his disciples free.

Be pleased, gentlemen, to accept my thanks for the very kind manner in which you have made known to me the decision of the Convention you represent, and believe me,

Very truly and sincerely yours, &c., &c.

SOUTHERN VIEW OF THE WHIG CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT.

MR. GREEN—A highly respectable and popular paper,—the Columbus (Geo.) Times,—says, the whigs say not a word about their principles, except that they are known by all. When the whigs, or the whig editors, are asked to explain the matter, to fill up the awful hiatus, we can pin them down to nothing. Their columns present the same staring blank, so far as elimination or discussion of principles goes, as do the proceedings of their conventions. The whole gist of whig principles and whig tactics in the present campaign, is crowded into about two inches of the first column of their papers. Here it is, GENERAL Zachery Taylor! Here is the very marrow of whig principles. As for the Mexican war, the tariff, the bank, the veto power, the proceeds of the public land sales, the independent treasury, all these are merged in a 'GENERAL' scrimmage. A military saturnalia is to be celebrated, the drum and fife are to take the place of principles, and the destinies of this republican government with that of its twenty millions of free citizens are to be committed to the hands of a mere soldier, who has no political principles and no knowledge of proper measures to pursue if elected. Is this a true picture? It must be, for the entire south as well as the north regard the whig candidate as far as principles and qualifications are concerned, totally unfit for the office, consequently it is not necessary to discuse principles or measures. That this may fully appear, let me consult General Taylor himself.

The following questions proposed by a whig committee were responded to by Gen. Taylor, in this very clear and satisfactory manner:—First, what are your views in relation to the justice and necessity of the Mexican war? Answer—'My duties and the position I occupy I do not consider it would be proper in me to give an opinion.' Second—what are your views as to the necessity of a national bank, and of the power of Congress for creating such an institution? Answer—'I am not prepared to answer this question.' Third—What are your views as to the effects of a protective tariff, and the right of Congress under the Consitution to create such a system of revenue? Answer—'I am not prepared to answer. I could only do so after duly investigating the subject, which I cannot now do, and I must say in substance now, what I have frequently said in regard to these matters, I am no politician. More than forty years of my life have been passed in the army, most of which in the field, the camp, or our western frontier, or in the Indian country, and for the last two years in Texas and Mexico, during which time, I have not passed one night under the roof of a house.' The fact therefore of the fitness of Gen. Taylor for the office of Chief Executive of the United States, is conclusively and most abundantly proved by the southern papers and southern men, and by his own positive testimony. And why do the south so strenuously advocate his election? Answer—'Gen. Taylor is from birth, association and conviction, identified with the south and her institutions, being one of the most extensive slaveholders in Louisiana, and supported by the slaveholding interest, as OPPOSED to the Wilmot proviso, and in favor of securing the privilege to the owners of slaves to remove with them to newly acquired territory.' And why is the north in favor of the election of Gen. Taylor? Answer, because he is the "available" candidate of the Philadelphia whig convention. NEPONSET.

SATURDAY, OCT. 14, 1848.

John A. Green, Editor.

TO NEW YORK. There is no question that the Fall River route between Boston and New York has become the most popular and extensively patronized of the several communications to the great Commercial Emporium from the eastward. The railroad distance is short, enabling the traveller to get an early supper, and retired to rest at the good old Yankee custom of nine o'clock in the evening. The steamers, "Empire State" and "Bay State" are both excellent boats, and comfort and convenience may be found on board. The "Empire State" has a most superior officer in the person of Capt. Comstock, who for years has been praised for his attention, courtesy and watchfulness, aside from his universally admitted knowledge of nautical science. He is aided much in his labors by the Clerk, who unites the requisites of a gentleman with the accustomed duties of his office.

CHOWDER. The evenings upon which "Yankee Seth" serves up clam chowder, are Wednesday and Saturday of each week.

A good account is given, (if we may judge from conversation,) of his generous gift last Saturday evening. His chowder was praised by all, and they were a multitude; therefore patronize him ye lovers of this delicacy.

ENGINES. We understand that the Amazon Engine Company, of Weymouth will visit this town, on Wednesday next, as the guests of the Tigers, No. 2. There is no mistake that Capt. Lapham and his company will extend the right hand of fellowship in good earnest to Capt. Thompson and his company.

DEMOCRACY AT RANDOLPH. A Democratic Mass Meeting, for Norfolk County and the Eighth Congressional District, will be held at Stetson Hall, in Randolph, on Tuesday, Oct. 17th, at ten o'clock in the forenoon. It will be addressed by Gen. Caleb Cushing, Hon. Benjamin F. Hallett, Hon. Robert Rantoul, Jr., and other distinguished speakers.

ECCLESIASTICAL. We learn that the ordination of Mr. James F. Brown, of this town, as pastor of the Unitarian Society in West Cambridge, which was to have taken place on the 25th inst., has been postponed until the 1st of November. Rev. Mr. Robbins of Boston will deliver the Sermon, and the Rev. Mr. Hall of Dorchester give the Charge.

THE ELECTIONS. Thus far the returns from Pennsylvania indicate that the whigs have made a gain.

With reference to Ohio, the returns appear to be favorable to the democrats.

The Florida election is still in doubt.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES. Fowlers & Wells, of New York, have issued the Phrenological Journal for this month with their usual promptness. It contains the phrenological character of Professor George Bush, illustrated with a likeness. There are several other interesting articles, on important subjects, besides quite a number of original and selected paragraphs under the head of Miscellany.

The same house also publish the Water-Cure Journal and Herald of Reforms, which contains a great variety of articles on subjects connected with the objects of the work. Believers in the water-cure should not be without this monthly. A Water-Cure Almanac for 1849, has been issued by the same firm. It contains forty eight pages of valuable matter. Price fifty cents a dozen.

The Boys' and Girls' Magazine and Firesic Companion we have received from Bradbur & Guild, Boston, "Mark Forrester," its editor furnishes a very attractive little work for the juveniles.

"The Child's Friend" is another little work now come to our table for the first time, edited by Eliza Lee Follen, which commenced a new volume with the October number. The typography is very handsome. See prospectus in another column.

FARMERS' ALMANAC. Jenks, Palmer & Co., of Boston, have brought out "The (old) Farmer's Almanac" for 1849, by Robert B. Thomas. Farmers in New England could not fortell the weather with any degree of certainty without consulting the pages of this annual visitor, which now comes to their homes and firesides for the fifty-seventh time. Mrs. E. Hayden has them for sale.

GEORGIA ELECTION. The Congressional election in Georgia has resulted in the election of four democrats and four whigs.

THANKSGIVING. The Governor, with advice of Council, has appointed Thursday, 30th of November next, to be observed as a day of Public Thanksgiving and Praise throughout this Commonwealth.

STATE NOMINATION. The whigs of the Ninth District have nominated Rev. Orin Fowler of Fall River as their candidate for Congress. The free soil convention in the same district have nominated Nathaniel Morton, Jr. In the Third District the free soil party have nominated Chauncey L. Knapp of Lowell, for Congress. John G. Palfrey has been nominated by the same party for the same office in the Fourth District. Hon. Joseph T. Buckingham of Cambridge is on the Senatorial ticket of the free soil party.

"The Poets' Song to his Wife," which came to hand in rather a mysterious way, is omited in this number, but will appear in our next.

The citizens of Quincy, friendly to the Free Soil Principles, are hereby reminded that their meeting stands adjourned to meet at the Lyceum Room, on THIS (Saturday) EVENING, Oct. 14th at 7 o'clock.

It is desirable that there should be a full attendance, as business of importance will be transacted.

Whig Meeting at Quincy.

Gen. H. A. S. Dearborn of Roxbury, and others, will address the citizens of Quincy on political topics, which interest every person at this momentous crisis, on THIS EVENING, Oct. 14th, at 7 o'clock, in the Town Hall.

One and all, without distinction of party, are invited to attend. The Ladies are also particularly requested to be present.

Per order of the Town Committee.

Wistar's Balsam at Home.

Boston, April 14, 1846.

Mr. S. W. Fowle,

Dear Sir—I have been induced at the suggestion of many of my friends, to make known to the public through you, the great benefit I have derived from the use of the medicine called in the hope that others suffering from lung complaints may find the same relief by its use that I have done.

Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry,

The latter part of last summer and in the fall, I suffered greatly from a severe cough, pain in the side, difficulty of breathing, loss of appetite, and other symptoms which indicated a rapid decline. Three of the most learned and intelligent medical practitioners pronounced my case consumption, and stated to me that nothing but a change of climate could be of the least possible benefit to me, as my lungs were in a very inflamed and diseased state. At this time, in hopes I might find a temporary relief for my cough, I bought a bottle of the Balsam, which not only gave me the relief that my failing strength required, but seemed to give me new life and energy.

After taking several bottles of the medicine, my appetite returned, and with it my strength; my cold entirely left me, as also the night sweats, which, previous to this had been very profuse. In five weeks' time I gained eight pounds of flesh, and have been able ever since to take my accustomed exercise, a walk of from three to four miles a day, and attend to my regular business. I should be most happy to have you refer any one, who may wish further particulars, to me at my place of business, No. 305, Washington Street. Very truly yours,

WM. H. HOLBROOK.

None genuine, unless signed I. Butts, on wrapper.

Saco, January 28.

Mr. Brown—Sir, it afforded me great pleasure to be able to testify to the wonderful virtue of your Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters. I think my case is one of peculiar interest; therefore I send you a perfect sketch of my face before taking your medicine, and after its use, which you can make use of if you see fit, for the benefit of yourself or those that are similarly afflicted. I have been for the last four years most severely afflicted with a HUMOR covering my face and part of my body most of the time. I have been unable to attend to my business, during that time I have taken every medicine that has been recommended, and have drank gallons of the Sarsaparilla Syrup and decoction, all of which has not had the least effect upon my disease. At last I was recommended by my physician to give your Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters one trial, as he had used them with good success in a number of simiar cases. I have used only four bottles, and to my utter astonishment it has entirely cured me. I think the cuts which accompany this will show you the wonderful difference in my appearance. I do most sincerely recommend your medicines to all, and know they will find them a most valuable article. Yours, truly,

I. RYAN.

OBITUARY.

Died in Quincy, Sept 27th, aged 18 years, Miss Caroline E. S. Walker, youngest daughter of Nichodemus and Elizabeth Walker, of Sherburne, Chenango County, (N. Y.)

She left her native town early in August, for a year's residence in Quincy, with her sister's family. The bloom of health was upon her cheek. She was her father's idol,—her mother's hope. A joy and comfort was she to her sisters and brothers, and a sweet delight to her young companions. She had never been sick till now when her "sickness was unto death." She died of typhus fever, preceded by indications of dropsy upon the brain. She had been ill only one week. I never witnessed a more melancholy death; she was so good, so young, so beautiful, so apparently free from disease when she first came among us. To see her snatched so suddenly from the world—oh! it is heart-rending to contemplate!

Who can understand another's woe? The uninterested pass along unheeding, while the mourner's heart is almost bursting with grief. The young lady has broken away from a circle of most loving friends. Their hearts are bleeding from the terrible wound they have received. The distant parents—God be with them in this hour of trial! The departed loved one —she needs not our sympaties now. She is "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."

O, rest thee, gentle one!
For all of thee that earthly beauty made,
Is in its still and peaceful mansion laid,
And thy work is done.

O, rest thee, sister, rest!
We've smoothed the pillow for thy long last sleep,
And angels round thee their bright vigils keep,
With the good and blest.

O, rest thee, cherished dear!
'Tis hard to bear thee to the silent tomb,
So loved, so loving, in life's early bloom,
Without many a tear

O, rest thee, child of love!
The varying music of thy bird-like voice,
No more can bid our drooping souls rejoice,—
For it sounds above.

O, rest thee, kind and true!
A blessed treasure to our home was given!
But, ah! 'tis gone—to bless our home in heaven,—
From our earthly view!

O, rest thee, spirit bright!
Thou canst not come again these hearts to cheer,
But we will join thee in that upper sphere
Of celestial light.

Thou darling one, farewell!
How we shall miss thee at the silent eve!
How oft desire these lonely haunts to leave,
And with Carra dwell! J. W. G.

DIED.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
Child's Friend,
A Monthly Periodical for Young Persons.
EDITED BY MRS ELIZA L. FOLLEN.

A TRULY instructive as well as entertaining book for children is our simple object. Youthful life as it is, and as it ought to be, we would represent. All subjects that children can and ought to be interested in, we would lay before them. We shall seek to please and instruct our young readers, as we would if they were by our side, by setting before them the serious, perhaps sad, and then again the amusing incidents of real life; sometimes in the twilight hour we will have a fairy story for them; then if we or our friend can make them, we will give them conundrums or charades, or our own or our neighbors' jests, and now and then a short sermon, or a long history. We will, when so disposed, speak of the Sunday, of its precious rest, its beautiful recollections, its blessed uses; but we would also urge upon our readers the great truth that every day is the Lord's day, that all our time must be devoted to duty, and that every hour well spent is a holy hour. We shall aspire to become truly the Child's Friend, helping him to learn from all that is within and around him the wisdom and goodness of the Creator,—that wrong doing produces discord and misery,—that life is a continued school time, and that wisdom and virtue and the peace they bring are the true holidays of life.

It is our sole and simple purpose to make this work such as we have described, a book that a child may read to advantage and with pleasure, on Sunday as well as every other day in the week.

The October No. begins a New Series; being the commencement of the sixth year and eleventh Volume. It will be printed on new and handsome type and good paper. Each No. will be embellished with one fine engraving or frontispiece, and contain 48 pages 12mo making two volumes of 288 each besides Index, or about 600 pages a year.

TERMS—$1 50 per annum, or 4 copies to one address for $5—payable in advance.

And it appearing to the Court by the suggestion of the Plaintiff that the Defendant, Harris, is not an Inhabitant of this Commonwealth, nor was resident therein at the time of the service of said Writ—and that he has no last and usual place of abode, tenant, agent or attorney in this Commonwealth known to the Plaintiff or to said Officer, and that no personal service of said writ has been made upon the said Harris. It is ordered by the Court here, that the Plaintiff give notice to the Defendant Harris of the pendency of this action, by causing an attested copy of this order to be published in the Quincy Patriot, a newspaper printed in Quincy, once in a week, three weeks successively, the last publication thereof to be thirty days at least, before the THIRD MONDAY of December next. And that this action be continued to the next term of this Court.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
Child's Friend,
A Monthly Periodical for Young Persons.
EDITED BY MRS ELIZA L. FOLLEN.

A TRULY instructive as well as entertaining book for children is our simple object. Youthful life as it is, and as it ought to be, we would represent. All subjects that children can and ought to be interested in, we would lay before them. We shall seek to please and instruct our young readers, as we would if they were by our side, by setting before them the serious, perhaps sad, and then again the amusing incidents of real life; sometimes in the twilight hour we will have a fairy story for them; then if we or our friend can make them, we will give them conundrums, or charades, or our own or our neighbors' jests, and now and then a short sermon, or a long history. We will, when so disposed, speak of the Sunday, of its precious rest, its beautiful recollections, its blessed uses; but we would also urge upon our readers the great truth that every day is the Lord's day, that all our time must be devoted to duty, and that every hour well spent is a holy hour. We shall aspire to become truly the Child's Friend, helping him to learn from all that is within and around him the wisdom and goodness of the Creator,—that wrong doing produces discord and misery,—that life is a continued school time, and that wisdom and virtue and the peace they bring are the true holidays of life.

It is our sole and simple purpose to make this work such as we have described, a book that a child may read to advantage and with pleasure, on Sunday as well as every other day in the week.

The October No. begins a New Series; being the commencement of the sixth year and eleventh Volume. It will be printed on new and handsome type and good paper. Each No. will be embellished with one fine engraving or frontispiece, and contain 48 pages 12mo making two volumes of 288 each besides Index, or about 600 pages a year.

TERMS—$1 50 per annum, or 4 copies to one address for $5—payable in advance.

The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES.

Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc, etc. yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.

The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.

THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.

THE GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.

The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.

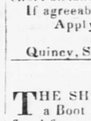

The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising tapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

THE BEST
Mechanical Paper in the World.

NEW VOLUME OF THE

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

THE Publishers of the Scientific American respectfully give notice that the FOURTH YEARLY VOLUME of their Journal will be commenced on Saturday, Sept 23d. This publication differs entirely from the many magazines and papers which flood the country. It is a Weekly Journal of Art, Science and Mechanics, having for its object the advancement of the INTERESTS OF MECHANICS, MANUFACTURERS and INVENTORS. Each number is illustrated with from five to TEN original ENGRAVINGS OF NEW MECHANICAL INVENTIONS, nearly all of the best inventions which are patented at Washington being illustrated in the Scientific American. It also contains a weekly list of American Patents; notices of the progress of all Mechanical and Scientific Improvements; practical directions on the construction, management and use of all kinds of MACHINERY, TOOLS, etc; Essays upon Mechanics, Chemistry and Architecture; accounts of Foreign Inventions; advice to Inventors; Rail Road Intelligence, together with a vast amount of other interesting, valuable and useful information. The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is the most popular journal of the kind ever published, and of more importance to the interest of MECHANICS and INVENTORS than any thing they could possibly obtain! It is printed with clear type on beautiful paper, and being adapted to binding, the subscriber is possessed, at the end of the year, of a large volume of

Four Hundred and Sixteen Pages,
Illustrated with upwards of
Five Hundred Mechanical Engravings.
And an Index.

Terms—Two dollars a year, in advance, or if desired, one dollar in advance, the remainder in six montes. TO CLUBS—5 copies, $8; ten copies, $15 Those who wish to subscribe have only to enclose the amount in a letter, directed to

MUNN & Co.,
Publishers of the Scientific American,
New York.

ALL LETTERS must be POST PAID.

VOLUME THIRD bound, $2.75, or in sheets, $2 are for sale. They may be sent safely to any part of the country. Patents secured and Mechanical Drawings executed at the cheapest rates, at the office of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

THE COMMON PEOPLE.

Tune—Yankee Doodle.

You mighty folks of college breed,
Who boast so much of knowledge,
And think you ought to take the lead,
Because you've been to College.
Chorus.
Fol-de-riddle, more or less,
Fol-de-rol-de-ri-do ;
Learned folks, I rather guess,
Don't always catch the idee.

You think it takes a dreadful sight
Of school or college learning,
To separate the wrong from right,
And truth to be discerning.

And now for me I rather guess,
You're apt to be mistaken,
For common people, more or less,
Know how to save their bacon.

While those who try to keep us down
At times will blunder sadly ;
Some recent acts of theirs have shown,
They calculate full badly.

The whigs who boast of knowledge great,
And swell'd for Zache Taylor,
Begin to lop their swag'ring gait,
And look a little paler.

They're like a horse that has the botts,
Their very bowels broaching ;
Great Daniel's nag no longer trots,—
Its latter end's approaching.

And those now miscall'd democrats,
At slav'ry's footstool bending,
Who serve the proud aristocrats,
Their strength to tyrants lending.

They'll find their braying will not pass,
Free Soil and Cass wont jingle ;
We know the Lions from the Ass
E'en when the voices mingle.

Both Cass and Taylor well we know
Are interest-bound to slav'ry,
And off'ring them to us you show,
Your folly or your knav'ry.

But common folks will set things right,
They know the way to do it ;
Free Soil they'll have in slav'ry's spite
Oppose and you may rue it.

And when that soil is peopled o'er,
With Freemen firm and steady,
Who call'd to sentinel the shore,
Will answer, 'here ! and ready.'

When commerce, agriculture, arts,
Their thousand sweets combining,
A blessing bring to countless hearts,
At freedom's altar twining,

The pointed question will be ask'd
Who voted to enslave it ?
The recreant's name will be unmask'd
And who so mean to have it.

F. M. Adlington, Weymouth.

THE SEASONS.

Summer's gone and over !
Fogs are falling down ;
And with the russet tinges,
Autumn's doing brown.

Boughs are daily rifled
By the busy thieves,
And the Book of Nature
Getteth short of leaves.

Round the tops of houses,
Swallows as they flit,
Give like yearly tenants,
Notices to quit.

Skies of fickle temper,
Weep by turns and laugh—
Night and day together,
Taking half and half.

So September endeth—
Cold and most perverse—
But the months that follow,
Sure will pinch us worse !

ANECDOTES.

A gentleman farmer married a very wealthy lady from the city, and moved her home to his country mansion. A short time afterwards, before the good lady had learned much about the science of agriculture, one of the hired men, in the absence of the husband, broke a plow, and it being in the early part of the afternoon when the accident happened, he was at a loss to know what to do the remainder of the day. Repairing to the house and making known his trouble to the mistress, he asked her what he should do, and she gravely proposed that he should plow the remainder of the afternoon with the cart.

A sailor once met one of his creditors, who made use of the opportunity to request immediate liquidation of the debt owing to him. The language he employed was rather severe, and the debtor at length exclaimed, 'What do you mean by talking to me in this fashion ? Do you think that you are the only man to whom I owe any thing ? I never heard of such impertinence.'

'Ah, Michael, you know everything, tell me, once for all, what they mean by community ?' 'Hold, it is very simple, I will state a case. You have fifty francs, Paul and I have nothing—you must divide between us two. Paul take twenty five francs and I take twenty five francs.' 'But according to this, I have nothing left.' 'Exactly so, and then you join the community.'

An orator holding forth in favor of 'woman—dear divine woman,' concludes thus :

'Oh, my hearers, depend upon it, nothing beats a good wife !'

'I beg your pardon,' replied one of the auditors, 'a good husband does.'

NORFOLK COUNTY

Health Insurance Company.

Capital $50,000.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A. S. DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled. MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—from the age of fifteen to forty five years :

Paying $3 a year, draw $2 weekly.

Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of

Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all

Diseases of the Blood,

such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated

Dandelion Panacea,

an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibilious remedy on record.

Oleum Jecoris Aselli,

Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,

For Coughs, Bronchetic, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.

The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

THE existence of the innumerable diseases which afflict the human race, appear to be WHOLLY CONCENTRATED, in regard to Malignity, Pain and Distress, to comparatively few in number. For instance, CONSUMPTION and SCROFULA, are either of them particularly horrifying to the feelings of even a careless observer ; and to the patient themselves, they are the very realization of a DEATH STRUGGLE.

No Human Science has heretofore been enabled to extirpate these fearful complaints, and it was only by returning to the Simple Resources of the Natural Kingdom, that success has been afforded. BRANT'S INDIAN REMEDIES never have failed to help and cure the sufferer, as is

CONTINUALLY ATTESTED

by a succession of witnesses and reference of the Highest Respectability in Character and Influence.

The INCIDENTAL ITEMS in relation to the peculiar action of these remedies in all LUNG, PULMONARY, and ERUPTIVE COMPLAINS, are to be found in a Free Pamphlet to be had of the Agents.

MISCELLANY.

'I AND MY HUSBAND.'

'It's all a notion,' continued the widow Bradlock, shoving her chair back from the tea table, wiping her mouth, taking a pinch of snuff and resuming her spectacles and knitting, 'it's all a notion, Miss Brimly. You can't tell afore you're married, who you'd be jealous of. Jealousy goes with love, and as wimmin are commanded to love their husbands, what's the reason they ain't commanded to be jealous, I'd like to know ? But some wimmin take to loving such queer, out-landish-looking human creters ! But there, I ollers said some folks hadn't any discrimination in looks, and they aint to blame, poor creters !'

'There was them, Miss Brimly,—yes, there was them as even called my husband humbly as of I should choose a humbly husband ! but I've sence found they said it to plague me, and they've got their pay, Miss Brimly, that they have.

'Now my husband was dretful tall, and somehow, kind of awkward, and wasn't over particular about havin' his trouses long enough, and got a notion of wearin' his red flannel shirt outside his green jacket in the winter, but when I and he was young, he could dance all night without goin' to bed in the mornin'.'

'I think I have heard something about his red h——'

'There, now, Miss Brimly,' interrupted the widow, removing her spectacles and wiping away a tear, 'that's just the way with people—the only fault that Zebediah Bradlock ever had, must be raked up when he's cold and stiff in his grave. What ef he did have red hair ? There was enough of it ; and when I combed and greased it, as I did every Sunday morning, it would look as smooth and slick all over his head, as a cake o' tallow just warmed a leetle round the edges.'

'And his eyes were—?'

Eyes ! blue o'course ; some folks, I know, called the blue yaller, and said his sight was twisted, but I never could see it, for all I looked right straight into 'em every night, to see if he telled me the truth, when I axed him where he'd been all the evenin'.'

'And then his nose wasn't bro—'

'Broken ! Zebediah Bradlock's nose broken ! Sakes alive, Miss Brimly, you didn't think I'd marry a broken nose. There was a ridge to be sure, about the middle on't, and the end turned up a leetle, so that I used sometimes to tell him in fun, that I'd hand the kittle on it. But not broken—I couldn't ha' stood that.'

'People will gossip you know, Mrs. Bradlock, and I have heard that his nose was not only broken, but that you was the cau—'

'Cause !' interrupted the widow, seizing the words from my mouth, as was her custom, 'I the cause ! It is very well to say that folks will gossip, as ef their doin on't was any excuse for the thing. But I s'pose I know what you're arter, and I'll tell you the hull story.

'It's my way, Miss Brimly, to take things by the forelock, and the mornin' arter I and Zebediah was married, I said to him, says I, 'Now Zebediah Bradlock, you're a married man, and o'course you'll be done sneaking round arter young wimmen, 'll come right hum when your work's done, and stay with your lawful wife. There's one person in particular, Zebediah, that I feel it my duty to warn ye again'—that's Polly Wilmot over the way. You've stopt in there and chatted with her so much while you was a courtin' me, that she'll try dretful hard to have ye continer the practice, 'thout once thinkin of the poor lone woman, who is stayin' and waitin'; and mind what I tell ye, Zebediah ; I put up with it then, and didn't say much, for I wasn't sure on ye, but now I've got ye, ye don't go prankin' it about the neighborhood any more, I'll warrant

MISCELLANY.

'I AND MY HUSBAND.'

'It's all a notion,' continued the widow Bradlock, shoving her chair back from the tea table, wiping her mouth, taking a pinch of snuff and resuming her spectacles and knitting, 'it's all a notion, Miss Brimly. You can't tell afore you're married, who you'd be jealous of. Jealousy goes with love, and as wimmin are commanded to love their husbands, what's the reason they ain't commanded to be jealous, I'd like to know? But some wimmin take to loving such queer, out-landish-looking human creters! But there, I ollers said some folks hadn't any discrimination in looks, and they aint to blame, poor creters!

'There was them, Miss Brimly,—yes, there was them as even called my husband humbly as ef I should choose a humbly husband! but I've sence found they said it to plague me, and they've got their pay, Miss Brimly, that they have.

'Now my husband was dretful tall, and somehow, kind of awkward, and wasn't over perticular about havin' his trouses long enough, and got a notion of wearin' his red flannel shirt outside his green jacket in the winter, but when I and he was young, he could dance all night without goin' to bed in the mornin'.'

'I think I have heard something about his red h——'

'There, now, Miss Brimly,' interrupted the widow, removing her spectacles and wiping away a tear, 'that's just the way with people—the only fault that Zebediah Bradlock ever had, must be raked up when he's cold and stiff in his grave. What ef he did have red hair? There was enough of it; and when I combed and greased it, as I did every Sunday morning, it would look as smooth and slick all over his head, as a cake o' tallow just warmed a leetle round the edges.'

'And his eyes were—?'

Eyes! blue o'course; some folks, I know, called the blue yaller, and said his sight was twisted, but I never could see it, for all I looked right straight into 'em every night, to see if he telled me the truth, when I axed him where he'd been all the evenin'.'

'And then his nose wasn't bro—'

'Broken! Zebediah Bradlock's nose broken! Sakes alive, Miss Brimly, you didn't think I'd marry a broken nose. There was a ridge to be sure, about the middle on't, and the end turned up a leetle, so that I used sometimes to tell him in fun, that I'd hand the kittle on it. But not broken—I couldn't ha' stood that.'

'People will gossip you know, Mrs. Bradlock, and I have heard that his nose was not only broken, but that you was the cau—'

'Cause!' interrupted the widow, seizing the words from my mouth, as was her custom, 'I the cause! It is very well to say that folks will gossip, as ef their doin on't was any excuse for the thing. But I s'pose I know what you're arter, and I'll tell you the hull story.

'It's my way, Miss Brimly, to take things by the forelock, and the mornin' arter I and Zebediah was married, I said to him, says I, 'Now Zebediah Bradlock, you're a married man, and o'course you'll be done sneaking round arter young wimmen, 'll come right hum when your work's done, and stay with your lawful wife. There's one person in particular, Zebediah, that I feel it my duty to warn ye agin'—that's Polly Wilmot over the way. You've stopt in there and chatted with her so much while you was a courtin' me, that she'll try dretful hard to have ye continer the practice, 'thout once thinkin of the poor lone woman, who is stayin' and wattin'; and mind what I tell ye, Zebediah; I put up with it then, and didn't say much, for I wasn't sure on ye, but now I've got ye, ye don't go prankin' it about the neighborhood any more, I'll warrant ye, and I expect ye don't want to, do you, Zeby?'

'Well, now,' said he, kinder sorrowfully, 'it's rather a hard case, when a woman comes to the door and axes ye to come in, and see ef her potater field didn't yield nicely, or to help her fix up a little door to her shed,—I say, then it's rather hard that he must tell her no and go right by. I don't much think I could do it, Miss Bradlock. (He ollers called me Miss Bradlock, and I called him Zebediah or Zeby. I tell ye, Miss Brimly, my mind was made up in a minnit; my dander rix, so I riz too, and says I,

'Zebediah Bradlock, you're my lawfully wedded husband, aint ye?'

'I expect I am,' says he, castin kinder lovin' sheep's eyes at me.

'Well,' says I, 'my husband don't go to see Polly Wilmot.'

'Why?' says he a leetle bewildered.

'Cause,' says I, she's the worst cretur livin'. She's no more regard for the blessed chains o' marriage than you'd have for a fly, and I've seen her talk larf, and be as lively as a cricket with a married man for a hull blessed winter's evenin'.'

'You was there, then—she warnt alone with him,' said Zebediah, and the cretur showed a disposition to larf a leetle, which made my dander worse riz than before, for there's nothin' makes me madder than to have any body begin to larf when I'm a givin on 'em good advice; so I ketched the puddenstick out o' the bilin' hot hasty pudden, and was goin' to give him such a taste of hot things an 'ad larn him manners, when he saw what was cumnin' and streaked it for the door. I followed arter, upsot the table, broke all the dishes, and got the door slammed in my face an' eyes; the cretur fastened it outside, and a minnit arter, I seed him stannin' by the garden fence, his hands in his pockets, and he a larfin as though he'd split.

'Larf on,' says I through the window, 'the day o' reckoning 'll surely come,' and I'd a thrown the puddenstick out at him, for I was as mad as a march hare, only I knew Polly Wilmot was a watchin us, an ef she see me do that, she'd larf too.

After a spell, Zebediah walked off, and I smelt my pudden a burnin, and when I turned round to take care o' that, I see all my dishes broke, and then I set right down and cried like a baby.

'Lud o' massy!' thinks I to myself 'ef this is bein married, I'd give my best meetin shoes to be unmarried. Larfin 'cause I warned him 'gainst the snares of a flirtin old maid,—the next mornin too. I never thought 'twould ha' come to this, or I'd a been doin something else when I stood on the meetin 'us steps, a shakin and shiverin with the cold, to give him a chance to go hum with me. Larfin—and I tell ye Miss Brimly, I felt as ef every hair on my head riz right up in a rebellion, against such barbarous treatment.

I'm a woman of considerable spirit Miss Brimly, when it gets a goin, and openin the cupboard, I took every dish that wasn't broken and smashed it agin the floor; it was some comfort to see 'em all lyin there in a heap, though you mayn't think so, for you've never known what 'tis to have a battle with your husband the next mornin arter the weddin' and come off worsted.

As I was sayin, I felt better, but I couldn't rest easy till Zebediah had seen it, and puttin on my shawl and silk han'kerchie' I started arter him. 'Twas so cold I fancied he wouldn't stay out long, so I went into all the neighbors hous'n inquirin' for him; but nobody hadn't seen him, and more'n that, everybody started an' larfed, as if they thort 'twas queer to see a woman sarchin for her husband the first day arter they was married.

But he had 'scaped punishment that time, for sartin as I then thought, and I steered the shortest way hum, determined to sharpen up the butcher-knife and cut my throat. I went along with my head down, thinking what Zebediah would say when he did come hum, and found me stretched on the floor a lifeless and bleedin corpse.

I was jest then goin by Polly Wilmot's house, and she run out sayin.'

'Good mornin, Mrs Bradloch—how d'ye do this morning?'

'Well 'nuff, I spose,' says I.

'Glad to hear it,' says she, 'and I wish you would ask Mr Bradlock to step over in the course of the day and cut up my pig; if you'll send over some work by him I'll sew enough to pay for it.'

'I didn't make no answer, but went along saying to myself—

'The desateful cretur! wonder if she thinks my husband's goin to be her waiter; but afore he gits that message, I shall be dead! Then there'll be nobody to hinder him from goin arter Polly—p'raps he'll marry her! But shall I cut my throat an have all the trouble an pain o' dyin, jest to open a way for Polly to be mistress of my house—and use all my things too.

'I warnt such a fool, Miss Brimly—I couldn't ha been hired to done it arter I thought o' that, and I started hum upon the run. I opened the door in a hurry, and who should be sittin there by the fire, looking sorry and angry at the broken crockery, but Zebediah himself.'

'I was taken by surprise that time, and stood still a minnit to think how to act, when he said, says he,

'Who broke all these dishes, Miss Bradlock?'

'Now Miss Brimly, ef there is one thing more'n all the rest that makes my blood bile, it's bein called to an account by a man, and I answered in considerable of a smart tone.'

'I broke 'em—whose business is it? they're mine. But them dishes is a secondary affair I ruther never have a dish in my house than to see a man fly into a passion, and then larf because I give 'em a leetle good advice. But it ain't no use—my heart's broke—I s'pose you will go and see Polly arter all.'

'Well, I recon I shall hafter sometimes,' says he, lookin right straight into the fire.

I sprung up an ketched held of his bright red hair, with a yauk that made him groan for a minnit, an says I, holdin on tighter an tighter, 'cause he squirmed so—

'Ain't this a blessed sight, Zebediah Bradlock, the next day arter ye are married, to hear ye tell yer poor, 'sconsolate, broken hearted wife that ye will go to see an ugly, flirtin old maid! Doesn't this look like bein a lovin, dutiful husband as yer promised ye would be. But I'm glad I've found ye out in season—the whole village shall hear of it—I shan't stand by to kiver yer faults, I'll warrant ye. I'll not keep up appearances for ye here to hum, an have ye streakin it over to Polly's every blessed night, an then, bimeby——O! Lud 'o massy! 'twould kill me outright;—but I won't live to see the day—you shan't have the consolation, Zebediah Bradlock, of seein me die by inches! I will sharpen up the butcher-knife, and you shall have the comfort o' seein yer abused wife die afore yer own eyes, an then ye'll have to think on that.

'I reckon, Miss Bradlock, interrupted Zeby that I'm ruther the strongest in the hands, and ef yer'll let go my hair, I'll sharpen the knife for ye so it'll go through quicker'n a streak of lightn.'

'Now Miss Brimly did ye ever see or hear of a woman that could a stood the like o' that? My blood was biling over, takin my hands out o' his nasty red hair, I ketched up the tongs and fetched him a blow across the nose that laid him flat on the floor, and made him yell like bloody murder! In a minnit arter, the blood streamed out o' his nose an mouth, an says he—'

'You've killed me, Miss Bradlock, you have—what shall I do—run over and git Polly, won't ye—she'll know how to save me, p'raps—dear!'

'Arter all that, he wanted Polly, but I forgave him then, poor man, for he was white as a sheet, and didn't know what he was sayin. I felt to wipin up the blood and cryin like a baby, an wonderin how [illegible] with such a blow; and when I got him up on to the bed, and he looked as if every minnit ud be his last, I thort ef he could only live and git over it, I'd send for Polly to come and stay the hull day, and he might go hum with her in the evenin.

'But did he recover from the effects of that bruise?' I inquired, as the old lady paused, and rested her plump chin in the palm of her hand, as though again mentally living over the scene which she had just described.

'Mercy, yes!' she replied, starting from her reverie, and evidently wishing to efface a part of the impression which her recital had produced. 'Mercy, yes, and was as chipper as a cricket afterwards; he warnt so dretfully hurt arter all, Miss Brimly.'

'I presume, Mrs Bradlock,' continued I, 'that so sad an accident, and being constantly reminded of it, by the presence of the ridge on his nose, must have effectually cured your jealou—'

'Jealousy!' echoed she, dropping her work; the fire from two coal black eyes flashed upon me like the sharp glare of lightning. 'Jealousy, you'd say; well, I guess it didn't. Mine's a nat'ral jealousy, and hard to root out; however, I'm purty sure Zeby didn't go nigh Polly Wilmot for a long time; twarn't her fault, though, she axed him often enough.'

'But, Mrs Bradlock,' said I, gradually working towards the point at issue I 'wasn't it strange that when your husband had so good a home, he should have spent all his evenings, in the bar room of the village tavern?'

'Well, not so very strange,' she replied, evidently at a stand whether to criminate herself or him. Ye see, I didn't love to have him go out among the neighbors, 'cause they all took sich a likin to him; and I didn't ask 'em to my house, 'cause he'd have to go home with 'em; so I never said nothin agin his goin to the tavern—I knowed he only found men there.'

'And he generally returned somewhat intoxicated?'

'Why, as to that, I'll tell you, though I wouldn't anybody else, that he warnt exactly sober a night for about fifteen years.'

'Of course,' continued I, 'during that space of time he acquired the habits which characterize intemperate men?'

'Y-e-s, he did git to be rather slovenly at last; but Miss Brimly, that warnt so bad as some other things, for I generally had a plenty of soap and water, and sand by me, and could scrub him up on extra 'casions.'

'I supposed it was so,' I observed in reply; 'but there has been one report about him, which I must say I have never believed; the gossip is, that he occasionally partook of his neighbors' comforts without rendering a suitable compensation—of course you will contradict that?'

'No,' said the widow, 'I'm bound to tell the truth about the poor dear man, if he is dead and departed. He did steal sometimes—the more shame to him—but when I knowed a thing was stolen, I allers made him carry it hum, for I despise stealin, Miss Brimly.

'No doubt of it, Mrs Bradlock; and I will only trouble you with one more query—your husband wasn't miserly?'

'There, Miss Brimly, that's the worst of all. I did hope that nobody knowed of that but me. The truth is, he was the addest and myserlyest cretur you ever sot eyes on; but I don't see how it leaked out.'

'I have heard several instances mentioned, but something about a coffin struck me as most singular.'

The old woman took off her glasses, brushed away the tears, and with mingled tenderness and indignation replied,

'We had but one baby—poor thing! and that died afore it seed one year. Well, I kept the little body in my bureau drawer moren a week, waiting for Zebediah to get a coffin. At last I grew consarned about it, and set him off in arnest to the village, 'bout two miles. I declare it's awful to think of any body being so stingy; but instead of buying one, he went to a shop, begged some old boards, and made a sort of a thing that he called a coffin. The next day he cum hum with it under his arm; and what do you think was inside on't? One ounce o' tea, two ounces o' sugar, six crackers, two pounds o' flour, and a gallon o' rum! It made my hair stand on eend. I gin him as sound a dressin as one man ever had. And when he told me to mind my own business, I fetched him a cut with my mop-handle across his back, that—that—

The widow's tears interrupted her experience. After a brief pause I said,

'Mr Bradlock died not long after that, I believe.'

'Yes,' sobbed she, 'jest nine weeks to a day. He never done a stroke o' work arterwards, and many's the hour, Miss Brimly, that I've cried, thinkin to myself that praps that blow was the cause o' his death. But it's no use blubberin about it—it wont bring him back—poor dear Zeby!'

'Then you did love him, after all?'

'Better a great deal, than I did any body else; and I'm sure every body, specially all the wimmen liked him.'

'It's quite a mystery to me,' I remarked, 'I am positive that I couldn't even tolerate such a person in my house; much less, call a man like him husband.'

'Why!' demanded the widow amid her tears, with surprised as unaffected as though all the world knew that she had been telling the veriest falsehood.

'Why?'

'Why!' retorted I in astonishment. 'According to your own description, he was one of the homeliest, coarsest, meanest, most unrefined, lazy, thievish, covetous, miserly beings in th—'

'The old woman's temper took fire on the instant. Luckily, I saw her pull out two of her knitting needles and sprang from her arm chair. I rushed from the door, catching my bonnet as I flew; and from that day to this have never spied the widow's flashing eyes; but I have wondered anew at Love's queer antics, and more especially, that of all created men, Zebediah Bradlock should be the object of jealousy.

P. S. Upon consideration I am satisfied that Zebediah Bradlock was not naturally vicious, for there are two atrocities of which he was never found guilty—segar smoking, and (still more unpardonable,) STEALING HIS NEIGHBOR'S NEWSPAPER!

VARIETIES OF MILK.

As far as we know, no nation uses the milk of any carnivorous animal. There is no reason for believing that the milk of this order of animals would be either disagreeable or unwholesome; but the ferocity and restlessness of the creatures will always present an obstacle to the experiment. The different milks of animals with which we are acquainted agree in their chemical qualities, and is confirmed by the fact that other animals beside man can be nourished in infancy by the milk of very distinct species. Rats and leverets have been suckled by cats, fawns by ewes, foals by goats, and man, in all stages of his existence, has been nourished by the milk of various animals, except the carnivorous. The milk of the mare is inferior in oily matter to that of the cow, but it is said to contain more sugar and other salts. The milk of the ewe is as rich as that of the cow in oil but contains less sugar than that of other animals. Cheese made of ewe milk is still made in England and Scotland, but it is gradually being disused. The milk of the ass approaches that of human milk in several of its qualities. To this resemblance it owes its use by invalids in pulmonary complaints, but it has no particular virtue to recommend its preference, and is only prescribed by nurses. Goat's milk perhaps stands next to that of the cow in its qualities; it is much used in Southern Europe. It affords excellent cheese and butter, its cream being rich, and more copious than that from cows. Camel's milk is employed in China, Africa, and, in short, in all those countries where the animal flourishes. It is, however, poor in every respect, but still, being milk, it is inestimable where butter is not to be procured. The milk of the sow resembles that of the cow, and is used at Canton and other parts of China. The milk of the buffalo is also like that of the cow, though the two animals belong to different species. Every preparation of milk, and every seperate ingredient of it, is wholesome; milk, cream, butter, cheese, fresh curds, whey skimmed milk, buttermilk, &c. Butter-milk and whey will undergo a spontaneous vinous fermentation, if kept long enough, and alcohol can be distilled from it. The Tartar, it is well known, prepare large quantities of spirituous drink from mare's milk. Laing's Notes of a Traveller.

BENEFITS OF MACHINERY.

The New York American in an article on this subject, states that fifty years ago wages were no better, in fact less then, than at the present day, and the comforts and luxuries of life far more difficult to obtain. Articles needed by the poor man, cost in those days of comparative freedom from machinery, from twice to three times what they do now, and often more; and you will find that the greatest reductions are in those articles to which machinery has been most successfully applied. There is no article of luxury or comfort to which machinery has been extensively and successfully applied, of which the poor man cannot now get more for a day's labor than he could before such application of machinery. Salt is now less than one third, iron less than one half; shirtings and calicoes and cloth generally from one half to one fourth. Pins, needles, shoes, hats, everything in similar proportions.

Forty years ago such articles of use and ornament as locks were scarcely known, and could be afforded by the rich only. Farmers' wagons were chiefly sleds, their houses cabins, their chairs stools and benches, bureaus pins drove in the wall or poles hung across, and their windows often an old sheet or blanket. Nails and glass cost money in those days, and labor commanded little!

Since machinery has been applied,—better roads, turnpikes, railroads, all of which are a species of machinery, have been constructed. Steam has been made to propel the boat and the great ship, and to give power to the mill, to the jenny and the loom. Production in many articles has been more than trebled, and every thing the laborer needs has fallen, while his wages have raised or remain stationary. The clock which the farmer had not and could not afford, now adorns the mantle of his poorer tenant, and summons him to his meals.

There have been less improvements in agricultural implements than in machinery for manufacturing purposes—but this is the age of improvement. Let machinery be applied to husbandry also. Let bread and meat be as equal as it might be, let us rejoice, that if the rich man has more, so also the poor man has much more.

The cottager has now by the aid of machinery here, what great kings have not in Africa, and what the kings of England had not before the introduction of machinery. The great Alfred sat upon a three legged stool, while many an English or American tenant reclines on a gilded sofa. If the poor of England and America are not so well off as they should be, machinery is not at fault. It is machinery that has saved them from much greater misery, and the reform which they need are chiefly governmental and social.

THE FEMALE DRESS OF THE PRESENT DAY. We are inclined to think that the female attire of the present day is upon the whole, in as favorable a state as the most vehement advocates for what is called nature and simplicity could desire. It is a costume in which they can dress quickly, walk nimbly, eat plentifully, loll gracefully, and in short, perform all the duties of life without hindrance. The head is left to its natural size—the skin to its native purity—the waist to its proper region, and the heels at their real level. The dress is calculated to bring out the beauties of the person, and, each of them, has, as far as we can see, fair play. Flounces are a nice question. We like them when they wave and flow as in a very light material—muslin or barege—when a lady has no outline and no mass, but looks like a recording angel or a dissolving view; but we do not like them in a rich material, where they flop; or in a stiff one where they bristle; and where they break the flowing line of the petticoats, and throw light and shade where you dont expect them. In short, we like a gown that can do without flounces, as Josephine liked a face that could do without whiskers, but in either case, it must be a good one.

CURIOUS ICELANDIC CUSTOM. The Icelanders have a curious custom, and a most efficient one, of preventing horses from straying, which I believe is peculiar to this Island. Two gentlemen, for instance, are riding together without attendance, and wishing to alight for the purpose of visiting some object at a distance from the road, they tie the head of one horse to the tail of another, and the head of this to the tail of the former. In this state it is utterly impossible that they can move on, either backwards or forwards, one pulling one way, and the other the other, and, therefore, if disposed to move at all, it will only be in a circle, and even then there must be an agreement to turn their heads the same way.

'It is a curious fact,' says the Medical Times, 'that the most carnivorous quadrupeds are more averse to devouring women than men.' Yet women are described as the tender sex.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Quincy Patriot.

TEXAS UNCONSTITUTIONALLY ANNEXED TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Green:—I propose to present, in as condensed form as possible, a history of the annexation of Texas—the cause of the overthrow of Martin Van Buren in 1844, and the nomination of James K. Polk by the Democratic Party—the defeat of Henry Clay in 1844 and the nomination of Cass and Taylor in 1848. It is my design to prepare these papers mostly from congressional debates, quotations from newspapers, &c. A member of Congress, in a speech before the "Committee of the whole on the state of the Union," it appears to me, gave a true and impartial history of the whole matter—I remember, (says he) as do all who hear me, that, when the consummation of this Texas scheme came up, on the second week of the session, one hundred new members, like myself, were denied the right of being heard.

This great measure, fraught with consequences the most important and lasting, was lashed though this House with more than railroad velocity. The padlock was put upon our lips; by the aid of the "previous question," we were all gagged down. Our constituents, too, were denied a hearing. They protested loud and earnestly against this infraction of the constitution. Their remonstrances, so long as the last ground for hope remained, poured in thick and fast. Yes, 40,000 of these remonstrances now lie upon the table, denied a consideration, and refused the civility even of a reference. And I not warranted, then in seizing the opportunity to enter my solemn protest against this nefarious scheme? Had the remonstrances of my constituents been treated with legislative courtesy or had even two days discussion been allowed, I would not have been found here upon my feet to-day.

Why six long weeks have been consumed upon the Oregon question, and yet one hour and forty minutes, and that mostly in calling the yeas and nays, were all that was allowed upon the admission of Texas. Wherefore the difference? Ah! Texas had within it that dark feature, that dreded inspection, that that moli me langere property, that cried out "hands off" when approached. Oregon has no SLAVERY with it. Texas on the other hand, owes its existence and very life-blood to slavery.

But I hear it whispered, by gentlemen around me, that "Texas is in"—"She is admitted"—"we have married her, and cannot dissolve the contract." I repudiate the marriage. I disclaim the nuptial bonds. I have high authority for saying of Texas, "if, while her first husband be living, she be married to another, she shall be called an adultress." We had no constitutional right to propose, nor she the right to accept our proposal. But first of my objections to her admission is, that Texas has violated her own anti-nuptial engagement. By the joint resolution last winter, Congress gave its consent to annexation, upon the express condition, among others, that, in that part of Texas lying north of 36° 30' north latitude, slavery or involuntary servitude, (except for crime,) should be prohibited. Now, how stands the case? Has this political coquette adhered to this condition? No! most shamefully has violated it. In her new constitution, on which we have given her admittance into the Union, by the 8th article, slavery is not only recognised and sanctioned throughout the whole extent of Texas, but her legislature is constitutionally tied up from ever "passing laws for emancipation of slaves without the consent of their owners." This recognition and prohibition

State.

No exception, either north or south of that line. Under the 8th article, 1,500 slaves might be removed to-morrow into Northern Texas, despite the joint-resolution of the last Congress. Is this the way, in which northern gentlemen whose votes for the measure were secured by this pretended compromise, are to be rewarded? Is this the way in which slavery discharges its obligations, and fulfils conditions? Do gentlemen tell me there is no territory of any amount or value north of that line? Then I pronounce the fraud, the cheat, the duplicity the more downright and glaring. We were told of compromise—of dividing Texas into free and slave territory. A few in the north were sufficiently green and soft-faced to be caught by this cry. Without this pittance, small as it was, annexation could not have been carried. If there were nothing in that of worth, we were deceived then; if there were something, we have been deceived now.

* * * * *

Now, with this slave holding feature in her constitution, it is easy to see why the motion made to recommit the bill, with instructions to strike out that provision allowing slavery, was so adroitly evaded. That motion would have brought the elastic consciences of northern men to a test. It would have compelled gentlemen to have recorded their votes directly upon the issue of admitting Texas as a free or slave State. Hence it was that the "previous question" was clothed with more than its wonted odium and oppression. When the Honorable speaker decided that the motion for recommitment was not cut off by the previous question, an appeal was taken and slavery was strong enough to reverse the decision of the chair and overturn the precedents of this House. But I humbly insist, that had Texas complied with all the conditions imposed, her annexation and subsequent admission would still have been unconstitutional. I deny the power of these confederated States to annex a foreign nation to this Union. Some forty years ago Thomas Jefferson, whose authority should be conclusive, used this emphatic language. "The Constitution has made no provision for our holding foreign territory, still less for incorporating foreign nations into our Union. When I consider that the limits of the United States, are precisely fixed by the treaty of 1783, that the constitution expressly declares itself made for the United States. I cannot help believing the intention was, not to permit congress to admit into the Union new States, which should not be formed out of territory for which, and under whose authority alone, they were then acting." Here Mr Jefferson denies the right to us of holding, much less of incorporating, Texas as any foreign nation into the Union. True, he was speaking of the acquisition of Louisiana. But the case of Louisiana was much stronger for the advocates of annexation than was that of Texas. No conflicting claims interposed. The people of this territory desired to be incorporated. The old States were all anxious for the Union. And France the acknowledged proprietor, was willing to transfer her right to the soil. And yet, with all these adventitious circumstances, Mr Jefferson denied to us the constitutional right to make the acquisition. It is well known that he considered an amendment of the constitution as necessary, before this end could be attained. But in the case of Texas, all these circumstances, or nearly all, are wanting. More than one third of the original States were opposed to annexation. They opposed it as States in their sovereign capacity. Mexico, too, interposed as the original and rightful claimant, and a majority of the people of the Union were opposed to it. Now, then, can the pretended disciples of Jefferson maintain for a moment its constitutionality? And mark still further the difference in the two cases. It was then being proposed to acquire Louisiana by treaty—not by the then unknown and unheard of method of joint-resolution. No other than the treaty making power was dreamed of by our government; and yet, under all these favorable circumstances, Mr Jefferson could not deem the constitution sufficiently elastic to admit of foreign territory. He contended that there should be an ex post facto amendment of the constitution, which by its retro-active effect, might legalize the acquisition. It is maintained, therefore that if foreign nations can be annexed to us, it must be by treaty, and not by joint resolutions. Mr Calhoun, in his great speech in 1816, on the commercial treaty with Great Britain, took the ground that "Congress cannot make a contract with a foreign nation—it belonged only to the treaty making power." This being true, and no rational man can doubt it. Texas could not have gained an admittance into our Union—the assent of two thirds of the Senate could not have been obtained. It is this: The confederated States of this Union form a sort of constitutional copartnership. They entered the firm as States. They are the old partners. It is denied that it is competent at law or equity, for a part of the members of the old firm to admit new partners without the consent of all. The act of admission, and the acts of those so admitted, will not be obligatory upon the firm. Texas has come in, unbidden by many of the States, and unwelcomed by a majority of the people, and it is denied that the majority of the people are constitutionally bound to recognize her as a member of the confederacy.

By this act the constitution lies trodden in the dust. The slaveholder's heel is planted upon it. And what adds to the darkness of the deed, is the base and unwarrantable motive which dictated this whole scheme of annexation. That motive was the strengthening, the extension and perpetuity of slavery.

For the Quincy Patriot.

GEN. DEARBORN'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Editor—Did you hear Gen. H. A. S. Dearborn last Saturday evening? No. Well, then you do not know how much you lost. You recollect the notice for the meeting read—'Gen. H. A. S. Dearborn, and others, will address the citizens of Quincy," etc, 'on political subjects of intcrest,' etc. I do not intend to give an abstract of his address for fear I should not leave much room for comments on the 'others,' but merely to entertain you with some of the sparkling gems and bright points thereof. The first part of his lecture was taken up with remarks on Mr. Van Buren, Mr. Polk and the vetoed internal improvement bill, together with a minute account of the great Lakes that lie on the northwest of us,—Lake Erı, Superior, etc,—he having travelled in those parts. He went very deeply into the tariff question and showed such an intimate knowledge of arithmetic and talked so loud in his estimates deduced by comparison of one with another that it was almost beyond my power to follow him. All this was rather dry, having been pretty much talked out some years since; but he soon came to something more interesting, exclaiming all at once —'But who is Gen. Taylor?' That's the question, thought I, after having dodged all around Robin Hood's barn, you have hit it at last; and I waited with breathless attention to hear his reply. 'Gen. Taylor,' says he, 'is a self-educated, self-created man" [cheers] Thinks I, the first blow lays it on pretty thick. He told us how through a long life his model, and constant study, had been the life and character of George Washington, and such an apt scholar was he that now he was fully equal if not a little beyond him, and that we might make the comparison for ourselves, he entertained us with quite an eulogy on Washington; telling us how much he was esteemed and honored throughout the habitable globe, how the most distinguished orators in the Houses of Lords and Commons in England had honored him, and even the heathen almost, loved and revered him. But we have lived to see another Washington. The day that 'saints and prophets waited for, but waited for in vain,' has at last gladdened our eyes. (Cheers.)

Gen. Taylor was great as a military man, (that is a human butcher.) Now to be a great General requires talents of the first order, (General Dearborn says this,) promptness, being often obliged to act upon his own judgment alone, when there is not time to ask advice of others, etc. 'Witness,' said he, 'his modesty. When complimented upon his success and achievements—'The credit is not mine, the men did it all.'' (Cheers.) Great modesty! He told the truth there, that's a fact, and so I s'pose he is an 'honest man.' 'Witness his humanity, in proof of which I will recite a verse from one of our late poets,' (some of the machine poetry of the newspapers) which he did, a part of which I remember, thus—which he explained as follows: After a certain battle he issued an order that all the wounded should be brought to the tent and taken care of, whether friends or enemies. (Cheers.) How benevolent! how humane! Was the like ever heard before? He went on to compare him with Napoleon, and that the Frenchman might have all the advantage possible against such fearful odds, he would take at once the most brilliant part of his career, as acknowledged by all historians, and how insignificant did he appear, how entirely thrown into the shade and annihilated by the comparison. (Cheers.)

He finally wound up on Taylor in this wise:—'Gen. Taylor is the most competent, the best fitted, best qualified man in the country or on the face of the globe to be President of the United States. (Cheers.) Had Clay or Webster but had General Taylor's military education they might have equalled him, but they had it not, and their light is totally eclipsed by the brilliant luminary, Gen. Taylor.' (Faint cheers.) Then he went on to Fillmore, another of those men who 'self-educated themselves,' a distinguished lawyer, etc, etc. Now, says he, having on our ticket 'two of these wonders of creation' our success is certain, sure. Their glory and renown will be a 'flambeau to light them on to victory' 'and in after times the name of Taylor will be written in the skies with stars of fire?' (Cheers, cheers.)

He spoke of the free soil party and called their arguments, platform, etc, windy words, frothy, tinkling brass and like that, an empty sound, (cheers) and as far as I could see, that was all the attempt he made to refute them. I suppose he thought it was all that was needed and more than they deserved for said he, 'We commiserate the free soil men. We pity them, deluded, easily led away as they are, and after the 7th of November, we will forgive them,' (cheers) uttered with all the dignity and full of all the magnanimity and forbearance he could command.

About this time the presiding officer whispered in his ear, upon which he said he did not know he had detained us so long and would close, and said he 'I must apologize to the ladies for a long, dry, and uninteresting talk, but our cause is glorious, and my confidence in its final success is only equalled by my high respect and esteem for the female character.' Then he sat down amid vociferous cheering, evidently much pleased with himself and all around him.

One Mr. Swan then got up, but his speech, which was addressed to 'those whigs who intend to vote for Van Buren' was so lengthy, so argumentative, and so profound, that a more learned correspondent than myself must report it for you. Sumner and a song were then called for, but they seemed to think that the whig cause did not need their help this time and were mum.

In conclusion I must beg leave to present my thanks to Gen. H. A. S. Dearborn and the aforesaid Swan for their very convincing arguments and earnest efforts to make us understand the position of the whig candidate in regard to the great questions of the day, and particularly for their lucid exposition of their situation in regard to the New Orleans slave market, the slave cultivated cotton plantation and the 'peculiar institution' in general.

John A. Green, Editor.

Boston Museum. The Bostonians may be justly proud of the enterprise that has erected so beautiful a place of amusement in their city, as the large granite building near the junction of Tremont and Court streets, known as the Boston Museum. In it is deposited, if not the largest, certainly the most valuable and best arranged specimens of natural objects and works of art in this country, to which are added from time to time exhibitions of human or animal curiosities, of which by far the strangest ever seen is now on view, it being reputed to present an appearance similar to the supposed fabulous Mermaid. Large audiences are also attached to this elegant resort, by the superior, and moral tone of its theatrical entertainments, that take place every evening in a beautiful Exhibition Room erected expressly to present them with every possible effect, heightened considerably by the addition of elegantly painted scenery, and the combined efforts of a company of actors of acknowledged talent, and a powerful Orchestra. In another and a most essential particular, this establishment may also claim peculiar distinction, as for only 25 cents the visitor is privileged to see all the amusements.

Engine Trial. Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather last Wednesday, a large concourse of people were in attendance to witness and participate in the friendly contest between the engine companies, Amazon of Weymouth and Tiger of this place. The Tiger was the "bully tub," and the company after the plays were ended, escorted their friends and invited guests to the Town Hall, where a collation was provided by Major French of the Hancock House, who it is unnecessary to say, knows how such things should be done. Upwards of four hundred persons partook of the "good cheer;" the kindest feelings seemed to prevail, and every thing passed off very pleasantly—barring the unpleasant weather.

Fire in Quincy. An unoccupied house, situated about a mile from this village, and owned by Mr Ebenezer Adams, was burned on Tuesday evening. No one had been in the building during the afternoon, and it is not known how the fire originated. It was partially insured. In addition to our own fire companies, engines from the neighboring towns were on the ground.

Fire in Braintree. A dwelling house, two barns and a shop, belonging to a Mr Thompson, in Braintree, were destroyed by fire on Monday evening last. There was a small insurance on the property, but we learn that the loss will fall heavily on an industrious working man.

Hamilton's Dramatic Museum. Another place of theatrical entertainment has been opened in Boston, in Beach street, near the United States Hotel, under the management of Messrs Hamilton & Stone.

Water Celebration in Boston. The City Government are making arrangements for a grand celebration next Wednesday, in honor of the introduction of water from Lake Cochituate into the city. There will be a procession, address, ringing of the bells, &c., during the day, and music and illumanations in the evening.

V. B. Palmer's Business Men's Almanac for 1849. This work besides the usual calculations of an almanac, contains a great amount of local and general information, useful to almost all classes of active man. We know of no other form in which so much valuable information can be obtained for double the price.

Newspaper Offices Burned. Considerable of a fire occurred in Nashville, (N. H.) recently, by which the New Hampshire Telegraph office was destroyed.

A fire broke out in Washington St. Boston last Saturday evening, which destroyed the offices of the "Nation" and the "Yankee Blade."

The Elections. The telegraphic returns to the Boston papers give the House of Representatives in Ohio to the Democrats by three majority. It is the general opinion that Ford, whig, is elected Governor. Accounts from Florida give the Whigs 600 majority.

Singular. We find the following paragraph in the Bath (Me.) Tribune of the 13th inst. We presume the operator was G. Ware Gay, M. D. formerly of this place:

"We saw, yesterday, a large needle which was cut out of the thigh of a little girl about three years of age, daughter of Dr. Gay, of this city. The operation was performed by her father. It lay about half an inch below the surface, lengthways of the limb. It is not known when or how it came there, as the child had made no complaint until a day or two since, and there was no mark on the surface indicating where it entered. Had it been suffered to remain, it would, doubtless, from its position, have traversed the whole length of the limb before it would have reached the surface."

Returned. Mr Hammond, Cashier of the Dorchester and Milton Bank, returned to his residence in Dorchester, on the 14th inst., in a very exhausted state of bodily health. It is now said that he is a defaulter to the amount of $12,000.

Convicted. George Miller, who has been on trial for some time past in Boston, for forging sundry notes, has been convicted on three indictments.

Dr. V. P. Coolidge. This unhappy man is now confined in a cell of which the ground dimensions do not exceed eight feet by four. A part of this narrow room is occupied by his bed. The cell has no window, the light and air being admitted through an aperture in the door. His friends say he cannot survive the winter.

The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Mason, is about to proceed to Kittery, (Maine,) in order to inspect the site of the dry dock to be built there.

The Whig County and Ward Convention, for Suffolk county have nominated Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, the present speaker of the U. S. House of Representatives for re election to Congress.

Mr William P. Van Rensselaer, the patroon of the County of Rensselaer, (N. Y.) has made an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors.

Freeman Hunt, the distinguished editor of the Merchant's Magazine, is proposed as the free soil candidate for Congress in the Second District, in New York.

A most extraordinary case of bastardy was decided in the City Court, Baltimore. The mother, who was only sixteen years of age when her illegitimate child was born, swore positively that her unfortunate condition was the result of a rape. The fair character of the girl was established, and the man found guilty.

Wistar's Balsam at Home.

Boston, April 14, 1846.

Mr. S. W. Fowle,

Dear Sir—I have been induced at the suggestion of many of my friends, to make known to the public through you, the great benefit I have derived from the use of the medicine called in the hope that others suffering from lung complaints may find the same relief by its use that I have done.

The latter part of last summer and in the fall, I suffered greatly from a severe cough, pain in the side, difficulty of breathing, loss of appetite, and other symptoms which indicated a rapid decline. Three of the most learned and intelligent medical practitioners pronounced my case consumption, and stated to me that nothing but a change of climate could be of the least possible benefit to me, as my lungs were in a very inflamed and diseased state. At this time, in hopes I might find a temporary relief for my cough, I bought a bottle of the Balsam, which not only gave me the relief that my failing strength required, but seemed to give me new life and energy.

After taking several bottles of the medicine, my appetite returned, and with it my strength; my cold entirely left me, as also the night sweats, which, previous to this had been very profuse. In five weeks' time I gained eight pounds of flesh, and have been able ever since to take my accustomed exercise, a walk of from three to four miles a day, and attend to my regular business. I should be most happy to have you refer any one, who may wish further particulars, to me at my place of business, No. 305, Washington Street. Very truly yours.

WM. H. HOLBROOK.

Saco, January 28.

Mr. Brown—Sir, it afforded me great pleasure to be able to testify to the wonderful virtue of your Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters. I think my case is one of peculiar interest; therefore I send you a perfect sketch of my face before taking your medicine, and after its use, which you can make use of if you see fit, for the benefit of yourself or those that are similarly afflicted. I have been for the last four years most severely afflicted with a HUMOR covering my face and part of my body most of the time. I have been unable to attend to my business, during that time I have taken every medicine that has been recommended, and have drank gallons of the Sarsaparilla Syrup and decoction, all of which has not had the least effect upon my disease. At last I was recommended by my physician to give your Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters one trial, as he had used them with good success in a number of similar cases. I have used only four bottles, and to my utter astonishment it has entirely cured me. I think the cuts which accompany this will show you the wonderful difference in my appearance. I do most sincerely recommend your medicines to all, and know they will find them a most valuable article. Yours, truly,

I. RYAN.

Norfolk ss. Court of Common Pleas, September Term, 1848.

Isaiah D. Richards of Boston, in the County of Suffolk, Merchant, Plaintiff, vs. Martha M. Farnum of Quincy, in the County of Norfolk, Widow, and Harris Farnum of Dixfield, in the State of Maine, Defendants.

THIS is an action of Ejectment to recover possession of certain real estate wrongfully withheld from the Plaintiff by the Defendants on the sixth day of June, A. D 1848, as set forth in the Plaintiff's writ of that date. And it appearing to the Court by the suggestion of the Plaintiff that the Defendant, Harris, is not an Inhabitant of this Commonwealth, nor was resident therein at the time of the service of said Writ—and that he has no last and usual place of abode, tenant, agent or attorney in this Commonwealth known to the Plaintiff or to said Officer, and that no personal service of said writ has been made upon the said Harris. It is ordered by the Court here, that the Plaintiff give notice to the Defendant Harris of the pendency of this action, by causing an attested copy of this order to be published in the Quincy Patriot, a newspaper printed in Quincy, once in a week, three weeks successively, the last publication thereof to be thirty days at least, before the THIRD MONDAY of December next. And that this action be continued to the next term of this Court.

Wistar's Balsam at Home.

Boston, April 14, 1846.

Mr. S. W. Fowle,

Dear Sir—I have been induced at the suggestion of many of my friends, to make known to the public through you, the great benefit I have derived from the use of the medicine called in the hope that others suffering from lung complaints may find the same relief by its use that I have done.

The latter part of last summer and in the fall, I suffered greatly from a severe cough, pain in the side, difficulty of breathing, loss of appetite, and other symptoms which indicated a rapid decline. Three of the most learned and intelligent medical practitioners pronounced my case consumption, and stated to me that nothing but a change of climate could be of the least possible benefit to me, as my lungs were in a very inflamed and diseased state. At this time, in hopes I might find a temporary relief for my cough, I bought a bottle of the Balsam, which not only gave me the relief that my failing strength required, but seemed to give me new life and energy.

After taking several bottles of the medicine, my appetite returned, and with it my strength; my cold entirely left me, as also the night sweats, which, previous to this had been very profuse. In five weeks' time I gained eight pounds of flesh, and have been able ever since to take my accustomed exercise, a walk of from three to four miles a day, and attend to my regular business. I should be most happy to have you refer any one, who may wish further particulars, to me at my place of business, No. 305, Washington Street. Very truly yours,

WM. H. HOLBROOK.

None genuine, unless signed I. Butts, on wrapper.

Saco, January 28.

Mr. Brown—Sir, it afforded me great pleasure to be able to testify to the wonderful virtue of your Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters. I think my case is one of peculiar interest; therefore I send you a perfect sketch of my face before taking your medicine, and after its use, which you can make use of if you see fit, for the benefit of yourself or those that are similarly afflicted. I have been for the last four years most severely afflicted with a HUMOR covering my face and part of my body most of the time. I have been unable to attend to my business, during that time I have taken every medicine that has been recommended, and have drank gallons of the Sarsaparilla Syrup and decoction, all of which has not had the least effect upon my disease. At last I was recommended by my physician to give your Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters one trial, as he had used them with good success in a number of similar cases. I have used only four bottles, and to my utter astonishment it has entirely cured me. I think the cuts which accompany this will show you the wonderful difference in my appearance. I do most sincerely recommend your medicines to all, and know they will find them a most valuable article. Yours, truly,

I. RYAN.

It is situated on the Turnpike between Reading Village and Andover, nine miles distant from Lawrence, fourteen miles from Boston, and twelve miles from Salem and Lowell. The roads are in good condition, and with pleasant scenery renders the ride agreeable and inviting.

The House has been well furnished, and fitted up with all the most modern improvements; and it will be the aim of the subscriber to manage with reference to the comfort and enjoyment of boarders as well as travellers.

A share of public support is respectfully solicited.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

THE POET'S SONG TO HIS WIFE.

Rememb'rest thou the eve, love,
When you became my bride?
Rememb'rest thou the hour, love,
When we stood side by side
At Hymen's altar?

For on that eve, and at that hour,
With hearts and hands united,
We both invoked Supernal Power
To smile on love thus plighted,
At Hymen's Altar.

May our lives be long and happy, love,
Oh, Grief! touch not my bride!
May Time thy beauty spare, love,
For thou art still my pride,
As at Hymen's Altar.

When age shall dim our eyes, love,
And furrow our young cheek,
We'll muse on youth's gay time, love,
And musing, oft we'll speak
Of Hymen's Altar.

And when the summons comes, love,
For hearts so true to sever,
In Seraph's realm's we'll meet, love,
Reunited and--forever,
At Heaven's Altar.

THERE MUST BE SOMETHING WRONG.

When earth produces, free and fair,
The golden, waving corn;
When fragrant fruits perfume the air,
And fleecy flocks are shorn;
While thousands move with aching head,
And sing this ceaseless song—
'We starve, we die, oh, give us bread!'
There must be something wrong.

When wealth is wrought, as seasons roll,
From all the fruitful soil;
When luxury, from pole to pole,
Reaps fruit of human toil;
When from a thousand one alone,
In plenty rolls along,
The others only gnaw the bone—
There must be something wrong.

And when production never ends,
The earth is yielding ever;
A copious harvest oft begins,
But distribution—never;
When toiling millions work to fill
The wealthy coffers strong;
When hands are crushed that work and till—
There must be something wrong.

When poor men's tables waste away
To barrenness and drought;
There must be something in the way
That's worth the finding out;
With surfeits one great table bends,
While numbers move along,
While scarce a crust their board extends,
There must be something wrong.

Then let the law give equal right
To wealthy and to poor;
Let freedom crush the arm of might,
We ask for nothing more;
Until this system is begun,
The burthen of our song
Must, and can be, this only one—
There must be something wrong.

ACUSHLA-MACHREE.

Slowly the evening is closing around me,
Mournfully sighs the wind over the sea,
And thoughts arise that no more I may see thee,
Oh why dost thou linger Acushla-machree?

Mavourneen, mavourneen, how lone is my dwelling,
No sunshine can brighten while thou art from me,
And sad are the tears from my dim eyes now swelling,
Wept for thee, darling Acushla-machree.

List! there are footsteps the stillness now breaking,
Ah, 'tis thy voice, love, calling on me;
Each pulse of my heart from grief is awaking,
Lo, welcome! and bless thee, Acushla-machree!

But whisper thou lovest, and ne'er shall we sever,
I'll follow thy footsteps o'er land and o'er sea;
In the joy of my heart I'll enshrine thee forever,
The pride of thy Nora, Acushla-machree.

ANECDOTES.

A man who marries a rich wife must expect occasionally to have it flung in his teeth. A gentleman who had the misfortune to marry a fortune was once exhibiting the fine points of his horse to a friend.

'My horse, if you please,' said the wife, 'my money bought that horse.'

'Yes, madam,' replied the husband, bowing, 'and your money bought me.'

'Mister, will you just lend pa your newspaper? He only wants to send it to his uncle.'

'Oh! certainly. And ask your father if he'll just lend me the roof of his house? I only want the shingles to make the tea kettle boil.'

Sir Walter Scott tells a story of a gentleman who, irritated at some misconduct of his servant, said—

'John, either you or I must quit this house.'

'Very weel, sir,' said John, 'where will your honor be ganging to?'

'Say, Cæsar Augustus, why am your legs like an organ grinder?'

'Don't know, Mr. Sugarloaf, why is they?'

'Cause they carry a monkey about the streets.'

A brick grazed the head of Mr. Sugarloaf, just as his ears disappeared round the corner.

'I say, Tom, isn't it lucky that that fellow's eyes are cocked?' 'Why so?' 'Because if they were a match, his red nose would surely set them on fire.'

A person whose name was Gun, complained to a friend that his Attorney, in his bill, had not let him off easily. 'That is no wonder,' answered his friend 'he has charged you high.'

Boston, Sept., 2d. tf

NORFOLK COUNTY
Health Insurance Company.
Capital $50,000.
Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A. S. DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who, when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled. MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—from the age of fifteen to forty five years:

Paying $3	a year,	draw	$2	weekly.
" 4	"	"	3	"
" 5	"	"	4	"
" 7	"	"	5	"
" 8	"	"	6	"
" 10	"	"	7	"

" 12	"	"	7	"
" 15	"	"	10	"
" 27	"	"	20	"

The above Rates are for one year. Insurance can be effected with this Company for two and three years at a small additional premium—no payment is to exceed $100 in any one year.

FEMALES insured for one year only.
Ages fifteen to forty-five.

Paying $2,50	per year,	draws	$1,50	per week.

Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of

Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all

Diseases of the Blood,

such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated

Dandelion Panacea,

an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best anti-billious remedy on record.

Oleum Jecoris Aselli,
Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,

For Coughs, Bronchetis, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.

The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

THE existence of the innumerable diseases which afflict the human race, appear to be WHOLLY CONCENTRATED, in regard to Malignity, Pain and Distress, to comparatively few in number. For instance, CONSUMPTION and SCROFULA, are either of them particularly horrifying to the feelings of even a careless observer; and to the patient themselves, they are the very realization of a DEATH STRUGGLE.

No Human Science has heretofore been enabled to extirpate these fearful complaints, and it was only by returning to the Simple Resources of the Natural Kingdom, that success has been afforded. BRANT'S INDIAN REMEDIES never have failed to help and cure the sufferer, as is by a succession of witnesses and reference of the Highest Respectability in Character and Influence.

The INCIDENTAL ITEMS in relation to the peculiar action of these remedies in all LUNG, PULMONARY, and ERUPTIVE COMPLAINS, are to be found in a Free Pamphlet to be had of the Agents.

BRANT'S

MISCELLANY.

THE MAIDEN'S CHOICE.

Kate Darlington was a belle and a beauty, and had, as might be supposed, not a few admirers. Some were attracted by her person; some by her winning manners, and not a few by the wealth of her family. But though sweet Kate was both a belle and a beauty, she was a shrewd clear seeing girl, and had far more penetration into character than belles and beauties are generally thought to possess. For the whole tribe of American dandies, with their disfiguring moustaches and imperials, she had a most hearty contempt. Hair never made up, with her, for the lack of brains.

But, as she was an heiress in expectancy, and moved in the most fashionable society, and was, with all, a gay and sprightly girl, Kate, as a natural consequence, drew around her the gilded moths of society, not a few of whom got their wings scorched on approaching too near.

Many aspired to be lovers, and some, more ardent than the rest, boldly pressed forward and claimed her hand. But Kate did not beget love in all cases. Were this so, it was clear she would have to love half a dozen, for at least that number came kneeling to her with their hearts in their hands.

Mr Darlington was a merchant. Among his clerks was the son of an old friend, who, in dying some years before, had earnestly solicited him to have some care over the lad, who at his death, would become friendless. In accordance with this last request, Mr Darlington took the boy into his counting-room; and, in order that he might, with more fidelity, redeem his promise to the dying father, also, received him into his family.

Edwin Lee proved himself not ungrateful for the kindness. In a few years he became one of Mr Darlington's most active, trustworthy and intelligent clerks; while his kind, modest, gentlemanly deportment at home, won the favor and confidence of all the family. With Edwin, Kate grew up as with a brother. Their intercourse was of the most frank and confiding character.

But there came, at last a change. Kate, from a graceful, sweet-tempered, affectionate girl, stepped forth almost in a day, it seemed to Edwin, a full grown, lovely woman, into whose eyes he could not look as steadily as before, and on whose beautiful face he could no longer gaze with the calmness of feeling he had until now enjoyed.

For awhile, Edwin could not understand the reason of this change. Kate was the same to him; and yet not the same. There was no distance—no reserve on her part; and yet when he came into her presence, he felt his heart beat more quickly; and when she looked him steadily in the face, his eyes would droop involuntarily, beneath her gaze.

Suddenly Edwin awoke to a full realization of the fact that Kate was to him more than a gentle friend or a sweet sister. From that moment, he became reserved in his intercourse with her; and, after a short time, firmly made up his mind that it was his duty to retire from the family of his benefactor. The thought of endeavoring to win the heart of the beautiful girl, whom he had always loved as a sister, and now almost worshipped, was not for a moment entertained. To him there would have been so much of ingratitude in this, and so much that involved a base violation of Mr Darlington's confidence, that he would have suffered anything rather than be guilty of such an act.

But, he could not leave the home where he had been so kindly regarded for many years without offering some reason, he could not of course give. After looking at the subject in various lights, and debating it for a long time,

MISCELLANY.

THE MAIDEN'S CHOICE.

Kate Darlington was a belle and a beauty, and had, as might be supposed, not a few admirers. Some were attracted by her person; some by her winning manners, and not a few by the wealth of her family. But though sweet Kate was both a belle and a beauty, she was a shrewd clear seeing girl, and had far more penetration into character than belles and beauties are generally thought to possess. For the whole tribe of American dandies, with their disfiguring moustaches and imperials, she had a most hearty contempt. Hair never made up, with her, for the lack of brains.

But, as she was an heiress in expectancy, and moved in the most fashionable society, and was, with all, a gay and sprightly girl, Kate, as a natural consequence, drew around her the gilded moths of society, not a few of whom got their wings scorched on approaching too near.

Many aspired to be lovers, and some, more ardent than the rest, boldly pressed forward and claimed her hand. But Kate did not beget love in all cases. Were this so, it was clear she would have to love half a dozen, for at least that number came kneeling to her with their hearts in their hands.

Mr Darlington was a merchant. Among his clerks was the son of an old friend, who, in dying some years before, had earnestly solicited him to have some care over the lad, who at his death, would become friendless. In accordance with this last request, Mr Darlington took the boy into his counting-room; and, in order that he might, with more fidelity, redeem his promise to the dying father, also, received him into his family.

Edwin Lee proved himself not ungrateful for the kindness. In a few years he became one of Mr Darlington's most active, trustworthy and intelligent clerks; while his kind, modest, gentlemanly deportment at home, won the favor and confidence of all the family. With Edwin, Kate grew up as with a brother. Their intercourse was of the most frank and confiding character.

But there came, at last a change. Kate, from a graceful, sweet-tempered, affectionate girl, stepped forth almost in a day, it seemed to Edwin, a full grown, lovely woman, into whose eyes he could not look as steadily as before, and on whose beautiful face he could no longer gaze with the calmness of feeling he had until now enjoyed.

For awhile, Edwin could not understand the reason of this change. Kate was the same to him; and yet not the same. There was no distance—no reserve on her part; and yet when he came into her presence, he felt his heart beat more quickly; and when she looked him steadily in the face, his eyes would droop involuntarily, beneath her gaze.

Suddenly Edwin awoke to a full realization of the fact that Kate was to him more than a gentle friend or a sweet sister. From that moment, he became reserved in his intercourse with her; and, after a short time, firmly made up his mind that it was his duty to retire from the family of his benefactor. The thought of endeavoring to win the heart of the beautiful girl, whom he had always loved as a sister, and now almost worshipped, was not for a moment entertained. To him there would have been so much of ingratitude in this, and so much that involved a base violation of Mr Darlington's confidence, that he would have suffered anything rather than be guilty of such an act.

But, he could not leave the home where he had been so kindly regarded for many years without offering some reason, he could not of course give. After looking at the subject in various lights, and debating it for a long time, Edwin could see no way in which he could withdraw from the family of Mr Darlington, without betraying his secret, unless he were to leave the city at the same time. He, therefore, sought and obtained the situation of supercargo in a vessel loading for Valparaiso.

When Edward announced this fact to Mr. Darlington, the merchant was greatly surprised, and appeared hurt that the young man should take such a step without a word of consultation with him. Edwin tried to explain; but as he had to conceal the real truth, his explanation rather tended to make things appear worse than better.

Kate heard the announcement with no less surprise than her father. The thing was so sudden, so unlooked for, and moreover, so uncalled for, that she could not understand it. In order to take away any pecuniary reason for the step he was about to take, Mr Darlington, after holding a long conversation with Edwin, made him offers far more advantageous than his proposed expedition could be to him, viewed in any light. But he made them in vain. Edwin acknowledged the kindness in the warmest terms, but remained true to his purpose to sail with the vessel.

'Why, will you go away and leave us, Edwin? said Kate, one evening when they happened to be alone, about two weeks before his expected departure. I do think it very strange!'

Edwin had avoided, as much as possible, being alone with Kate, a fact which the observant maiden had not failed to notice. Their being alone now was from accident rather than design on his part.

'I think it right for me to go, Kate,' the young man replied, as calmly as it was possible for him to speak under the circumstances. 'And when I think it right to do a thing, I never hesitate or look back.'

'You have a reason for going of course.—Why not tell it frankly? Are we not all your friends?' Edwin was silent, and his eyes rested upon the floor, while a deeper flush than usual was upon his face. Kate looked at him fixedly. Suddenly a new thought flashed through her mind, and the color on her own cheeks grew warmer. Her voice from that moment was lower and more tender; and her eyes, as she conversed with the young man, were never a moment from his face. As for him, his embarrassment in her presence was never more complete, and he betrayed the secret that was in his heart even while he felt the most earnest to conceal it. Conscious of this, he excused himself and retired as soon as it was possible to do so.

Kate sat thoughtful for some time after he had left. Then rising up, she went with a firm step to her father's room.

'I have found out,' said she, speaking with great self composure, 'the reason why Edwin persists in going away.'

'Ah! What is the reason, Kate? I would give much to know.'

'He is in love,' replied Kate, promptly.

'In love! How do you know that?'

'I made the discovery to-night.'

'Love should keep him at home, not drive him away,' said Mr Darlington.

'But he loves hopelessly,' returned the maiden. 'He is poor, and the object of his regard belongs to a wealthy family.'

'And her friends will have nothing to do with him.'

'I am not sure of that. But he formed an acquaintance with the young lady under circumstances that would make it mean, in his eyes, to urge any claims upon her regard.'

'Then honor as well as love takes him away.'

'Honor in fact; not love. Love would made him stay,' replied the maiden with a sparkling eye, and something of proud elevation in the tones of her voice.

A faint suspicion of the truth now came stealing on the mind of Mr Darlington.

'Does the lady know of his preference for her?' he asked.

'Not through any word, or act of his, designed to communicate a knowledge of the fact,' replied Kate, her eyes falling under the earnest look bent upon her by Mr Darlington.

'Has he made you his confidant?'

'No, sir. I doubt if the secret has ever passed his lips.' Kate's face was beginning to crimson, but she drove back the tell-tale blood with a strong effort of the will.

'Then how came you possessed of it?' inquired the father.

The blood came back to her face with a rush, and she bent her head so that her dark glossy curls fell over and concealed it. In a moment or two she had regained her self possession, and looking up, she answered.

'Secrets like this do not always need oral or written language to make them known.—Enough father, that I have discovered the fact that his heart is deeply imbued with a passion for one who knows well his virtues—his pure heart—his manly sense of honor; with a passion for one who has looked upon him till now as a brother, but who henceforth must regard him with a different and higher feeling.'

Kate's voice trembled. As she uttered the last few words, she lost control of herself, and bent forward and hid her face upon her father's arm.

Mr Darlington, as might well be supposed, was taken altogether by surprise at so unexpected an announcement. The language used by his daughter needed no interpretation. She was the maiden beloved by his clerk.

'Kate,' said he, after a moment or two of hurried reflection, 'this is a very serious matter. Edwin is only a poor clerk, and you—'

'And I'—said Kate, rising up, and taking the words from her father—'and I am the daughter of a man who can appreciate what is excellent in even those who are humblest in the eyes of the world. Father is not Edwin far superior to the artificial men who flutter around every young lady who now makes her appearance in the circles where we move? Knowing him as you do, I am sure you will say yes.'

'But, Kate——'

'Father, don't let us argue this point. Do you want Edwin to go away?'

And the young girl laid her hand upon her parent, and looked him full in the face with unresisting affection.

'No, dear; I certainly don't wish him to go.'

'Nor do I,' rejoined the maiden, as she leaned forward again, and laid her face upon his arm.

In a little while she arose, and with her countenance turned partly away, said—

'Tell him not to go, father——'

And with these words she retired from the room.

On the next evening, as Edwin was sitting alone in one of the drawing-rooms, thinking on the long night of absence that awaited him, Mr Darlington came in, accompanied by Kate. They seated themselves near the young man, who showed some sense of embarrassment. There was no suspense, however, for Mr Darlington said—

'Edwin, we none of us wish you to go away. You know that I have urged every consideration in my power, and now I have consented to unite with Kate in renewing a request for you to remain. Up to this time, you have declined giving a satisfactory reason for your sudden resolution to leave; but a reason is due to us—to me in particular—and I now must earnestly conjure you to give it.'

The young man at this became greatly agitated, but did not venture to make a reply.

'You are still silent on the subject,' said Mr Darlington.

'He will not go, father,' said Kate, in a tender, appealing voice. 'I know he will not go. Kinder friends he will not find anywhere than he has here. And we shall miss him from our home circle. There will be a vacant place at our board. Will you be happier away, Edwin?'

The last sentence was uttered in a tone of sisterly affection.

'Happier!' exclaimed the young man, thr own off his guard. 'Happier! I shall be wretched while away.'

'Then why go?' returned Kate, tenderly.

At this stage of affairs Mr Darlington got up and retired; and we think we had as well retire with the reader.

The good ship 'Leonora' sailed in about ten days. She had a supercargo on board but his name was not Edwin Lee.

Fashionable people were greatly surprised when the beautiful Kate Darlington married her father's clerk; and moustached dandies curled their lips, but it mattered not to Kate. She had married a man in whose worth, affection, and manliness of character, she could repose a rational confidence. If not a fashionable, she was a happy wife.

AE EXCELLENT MOTTO.

'Do not forget that you are a lady,' is an admonition that cannot be too strongly impressed upon the mind and memory of every female youth who is now forming habits and a character which must constitute the basis of her future welfare and respectability. It is a great mistake, although a very common one, to suppose that great wealth is one of the indispensable constituents of a lady,

'Honor and fame from no condition rise,
Act well your part; there all the honor lies."

We readily admit that the possession of wealth affords apportunities for mental cultivation and the acquistion of external accomplishments, which cannot be enjoyed by those in more humble circumstances. But alas! how seldom are opportunities improved in establishing traits of character which constitute the real lady. How often do we see pride and arrogance assume the place of that modest self-respect, that constitutes the most efficient safeguard of female character.

When we see the accomplished belle, because she can touch the keys of the piano in systematic order, or trip the fantastic toe with precision, look down upon modest and unassuming merit, and evince her own superiority by a contemptuous sneer or a significant elevation of her proboscis, we are forced into the conclusion that she has forgotten that she is a lady.

When we see her who is less favored in regard to some of those peculiar circumstances, view those who are in the enjoyment of some advantages which she considers superior to her own with that eye of 'Base envy, that withers at another's joy,

And hates that excellence it cannot reach,'

and endeavor by her pestiferous breath and detraction to produce equality, not by elevating herself, but by degrading her rival, we conclude at once that she has forgotten that she is a lady.

Every one cannot be equally wealthy or equally accomplished, in every particular, but every one can be equally virtuous, equally discreet, equally amiable; and do much, very much towards making herself equally respectable and equally happy. Chicopee Telegraph.

ENJOYMENT.

Happy the man who in his journey through life can derive the greatest possible amount of enjoyment from the roses profusely scattered around his path, with the smallest sum of annoyance from the thorns which ever accompany the flowers. The combination of good and evil, of pleasure and pain, in temporal affairs, has been recognized and written upon by philosophers and poets of every age; and he has ever been held to act the wisest part who could temperately enjoy the blessings of life, without allowing their necessary accompaniment of ills to exercise more than a salutary caution upon his mind.

In addition to the real and unavoidable ills of life, every one seems to possess the habit of conjuring up a host of imaginary evils, for no other earthly purpose, as it would appear, than that of rendering himself most supremely miserable; for it is on all hands acknowledged that imaginary ills have that effect to a far greater degree than real one. 'Every man,' as Scott somewhere says, 'has his ain bubbly-jock;' and this phantom will assume different forms according to the temperament and idiosyncrasy of the individual. In one, it is the fear of want in the midst of plenty; in another, it is the fear of his pretensions to consideration not being recognised by the world; in another, perhaps, the unenviable faculty of seizing upon hidden defects, while more obvious beauties are overlooked; in all, whatever the shape in which this demon presents himself, his presence is obvious in the gloomy veil cast by him over all that is lovely and loveable; and while, perhaps, beauties, too obvious to be entirely hidden, will make themselves visible in spite of all his efforts, they are too often seen through a false medium, by which they are shorn of half their beams. MATRIMONY.

There will be a great deal of marrying and giving in marriage this Fall. Indeed, the happy pastime has already become a serious one—in extent only. We advise both sexes to be on the alert—for just as certain as a snuffer to the candle, all the girls, or all the men, who don't know much will be married, and out of the way before the year is out. A war of extermination—in a most smiling sense—and long-[illegible] unto those who do not feel and acknowledge its influence. That heads of families are wide awake, no one can doubt who reads the following:

Mr Smithson (an improvement on the celebrated name of Smith) wished to take Miss Brownly (another improvement) to the opera. He had been on terms of intimacy with the family for about five years 'but never spoke of love;' on the contrary, he had frequently declared his intentions of leading a bachelor's life. One morning he put his hand to the bell handle, and was admitted—

'Oh James,' exclaimed Miss Jane, 'where have you kept yourself so long?'

This took Smithson a little aback, for he had spent the preceding evening with the family. Before he could answer, however, Jane's brothers and sisters (eight or ten in number) had gathered about him. Summoning all his courage, he said—

'I have come to ask you—'

'Not here, James—not now—oh!'

'That is,' stammered Smithson, 'if you're not engaged—'

'Oh! oh! water—quick!' shrieked Jane.

'What's that' inquired her father; 'who says she is engaged?'

'I didn't mean—' said Smithson, in confusion.

'Of course not,' continued Mr Brownly, 'you could'nt suppose such a thing, when you've always been our favorite!' Then advancing and taking poor Smithson's hand he said, 'Take her my boy: she's a good girl, and loves you to distraction. May you both be as happy as the days are long.'

Thereupon mother and children crowded upon Smithson, and wished him joy, and company coming in at that moment, the affair was told to them as a profound secret. So Smithson got a wife without popping the question, and almost before he knew it himself. But we cannot help thinking he was hurried into matrimony. City Item.

THIN SHOES. We have frequently noticed quite a general tendency in our American ladies to wear thin shoes in the cold season. As the time is near for wet, sloppy streets, we would politely warn our fair readers against this dangerous exposure of health. Though consumption become seated in the lungs, it too often creeps in at the toes. Beware of this premature life-queller by keeping them well covered.

ARE YOU SATISFIED? If so, you are an anomaly. We have yet to see the first man or woman who is satisfied with his or her condition. They all appear to possess the disposition of the poor man who dug up a box of guineas. After counting his treasures, he exclaimed—'If I had found them twenty years sooner, I might have had the interest on them besides.' If we find wealth, we are sorry it is no more; happiness does not last; life is a dream, an empty show.

PARTY ASPERITY. We regret to see a bad spirit displayed in conducting the canvas in in some of the States. In South Carolina, for example, the home of the so-called chivalry, and in Charleston, the commercial metroplis of the State, there is a scandalous attack made upon Mr Holmes, the member of Congress from that District. In reply we shall let Mr Holmes tell his own story to the editor of the Mercury, in the columns of which, through a correspondent, he was first assailed:

[From the Charleston Mercury.]

Another attack is made upon me, and I am charged with the atrocity of delivering an Eulogy ever the remains of the late John Quincy Adams. Sir, I am one of those who would rather strew flowers over the bier, even of an enemy, than dig at the grave to find some bitter root with which to quicken my malignity.

Two evenings previous to the death of Mr. Adams, and when it was known that he must die, a committee called at my house, where my friend, Judge Butler, was spending the evening, and in the presence of the Judge, requested me, in the name of the Delegation of Massachusetts, to deliver some remarks over the body of Mr Adams. It was intended as a compliment from Massachusetts to South Carolina. If there be a gentleman in South Carolina who condemns me for complying with a request of the venerable Commonwealth of Massachusetts, that State which first shook hands with South Carolina in the perils of the Revolution, I envy him not his sentiments. During this canvass I have said not one word of services to the State or the city. I have asked no one to mention them. I have only replied to those who seem to enjoy the luxury of blasting the good name of a fellow citizen.

I. E. HOLMES.

This complaint speaks for itself, and comment add nothing to it. We could hope, for the sake of our common humanity, that there are but few men living who would thus make a word fitly spoken over the honored dead, an occasion for offence. He must be a bigot in politics who would seek out such an offence as a ground of objection. Mr Adams had his faults, and confessed them often before Heaven and before men; but his sterling honesty, his love of liberty, his life-long service, his vast knowledge, his high patriotism, all commanded and received the acknowledgments of the great and good everywhere. N. Y. Express.

MIRTH AND [illegible] 'It is good to be merry and wise.' Not only is this simple truth, but sound philosophy. It is an excellent thing to be mirthful, when you can: to smile at what amuses you; to laugh at what is ludicrous; in short, to look at the sunny side of things, and even in the gloom and cold of winter, to recollect that there is 'a good time coming,' when the sunshine and warmth of the glorious summer will make all things glad. Thus, even while we enjoy ourselves, we may be 'in doing so.' We may be exercising that hopeful, practical philosophy which makes the best of the present, and looks cheeringly forward at the future, with such rich promise.'

BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT. The setting of the sun. The brightness of our life is gone—Shadows of evening fall around us, and the world seems but a dull reflection—itself a broader shade. We look forward into the coming lonely night. The soul withdrews into itself. The stars arise and the night is holy.

ERROR OF THE PRESS. A Prussian paper announces that 'in Copenick, a lady's maid, shot herself yesterday, from disappointed love.' A subsequent number of the paper had the following curious correction—'The notice of a suicide is to be corrected so far as to say that the event took place not in Copenick, but in Potsdam; that it was not a lady's maid, but a page; not from disappointed love, but on account of debt; and also that the party did not shoot, but hung himself.'

A MEXICAN LOVE SCENE. On the American side of the Rio Grande lives a Mexican ranchero. He had a lovely daughter just merged into womanhood, who for some time past has elicited the admiration of a certain hombre of her acquintance. Not long since this enamoured caballero made a formal offer of his hand, which the lady indignantly refused. Usually one 'kick' is sufficient for hymenial aspirants. Not so with this gallant. He informed her that unless she willingly accepted his advances, he would choose his time and bear her off by force, though the lives of every other member of the family were sacrificed in the act. The villain has in part, it is feared, carried out his threat. One night last week the girl, fearing that she was not safe in her father's house, asked permission to pass a few days with a neighbor, which was granted, and, accompanied by her brother, left for her neighbor's house; since which time they have not been seen. Fears are entertained that there has been foul play, as the handkerchief and hat of the young man (her brother) were the next day found in the road covered with blood. Matamoras Flag.

HISTORY OF THE ANNEXATION OF TEXAS—REASONS FOR ANNEXATION, &c.

Continued.

Mr. Green:—It was admitted by all that no murmuring of complaint, or threats of revolt, were heard in the province of Texas, till after Mexico, by the edict of Iturbide, in 1829, proclaimed slavery abolished. From that time forward, a low but gradually increased muttering was heard from that portion of the population who had gone from the Southern States into Texas, carrying their slaves with them. This dissatisfaction gradually ripened into rebellion; in 1833 a convention was called, and the discontented portion set up for themselves. Impartial history will yet prove that revolution to have been as destitute of any adequate provocation, as the annals of revolution ever furnished. These Texan revolutionists, of course, had the open sympathy, as well as the covert support of almost the entire slaveholding South. From 1830 to 1835, the press was undisguised in claiming, that slavery must be reinstalled in Texas, for its future stability in the Southern part of this Union. The tone of the press at that day will establish the fact that slavery was at the bottom of the whole movement. Mr Secretary Upshur, in his official despatch to our charge d' Affairs in Texas, in 1838, declared that 'slavery would be abolished in Texas within the next ten years, and probably within half of that time, unless that government annexed to the United States.' Mr McDuffy, a distinguished Senator from South Carolina, in 1844, when alluding to the dangers of the increase of slave population said, 'now, it we shall annex Texas, it will oppose as a safety-valve, to let off this super abundant slave population among us.' Mr Calhoun, when Secretary of State, in a diplomatic communication of the 27th April, 1844, defending the policy, and urging the necessity for annexation, he says; 'It is made necessary in order to preserve domest ic institutions, placed under the guarantee of their respective constitutions, and deemed essential to their safety and prosperity.' 'Domestic institutions' are only another and polite name for slavery.

Here stands the recorded reason for annexation—the upholding and preservation of a foul system of human bondage! And this historical reason, uttered by the official organ of this great and free republic, will stand upon record, and be pointed at with shame and remorse, when all the aiders and abetters in this scheme shall have passed away. There is not a Southern man who will deny that slavery was the great, prompting, and decisive cause for annexing Texas. Now the act and the motive stand out in bold relief before the world. To rivet the claims of the enslaved African more firmly—to render his bondage safe and perpetual, a foreign slave territory, four times the size of New England, seven times as large as Kentucky, is seized, and, in defiance of law and constitution, attached to this Union! And for what? That the South might overbalance the free labors of the North. That the South might hold the reins of legislation in—That the South might have the preponderance of power to wield it over the North as the South wields it over their slaves. And is the South alone chargea ble as participating in this vile transaction? No, the North has been the slaveholder's criminal ally. In 1844, some political Esaus, who, for a mess of pottage, were willing to sell the birthright of freedom, for the loaves and fishes of office, were willing to sell the birthright of freedom

There's no mistake about it.

What e'er our state in life may be,
Of every high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.

A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.

Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it:
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.

RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

The Globe:

A Congressional, Agricultural and Literary Newspaper.

THE Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur; and a Congressional Globe periodically, as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source that may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in scientific and practical works on agriculture. For material, the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects, will be consulted, and, it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Globe, as a newspaper, and as a vehicle of information and amusement in other respects, will be under the charge of Francis P. Blair and James C. Pickett. The Congressional department and business concerns of the paper will be under the management of John C. Rives. The public are familiar with Blair and Rives connected with the press. In introducing Mr. Pickett as one of the concern, they will be allowed to say a few words of him. He is a gentleman favorably known to the Government, for the talent and judgment which distinguished his diplomatic service while connected with the mission to Quito; and more recently when Charge d Affaires to Peru. From his penmanship the Globe will derive the selections and translations from the French journals and periodicals, the comments on them, and the other literary articles, which will be found among its chief attractions.

The Globe will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the balance of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a Weekly Globe, a Congressional Globe, and an Appendix.

The Weekly Globe will be the vehicle of the miscellaneous articles of the daily print, with a synopsis of the Congressional proceedings.

The Congressional Globe will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States, and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and Appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue. The Editors of the Globe have borne their share in the party conflicts of the press. They claim an honorable discharge from the vocation. The Globe will inviolably maintain the neutrality which its relation to Congress imposes.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year, - - - - $5 00
For one copy of the Weekly Globe one year, 2 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of January, - - - 1 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of Jan. 1 00
For six copies of either the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, or part of both, - 5 00

The subscription for the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, after the 1st of January, will be $1 50. The original price of one dollar does not pay the expense of the publications in consequence of the great increase of matter published.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore no person need consume time in ordering them, unless the subscription price accompanies the order.

The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No. 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES

Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc. etc. yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.

The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.

THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and for all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.

THE GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.

The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.

The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

Norfolk ss. Court of Common Pleas, September Term, 1848.

NATHANIEL H. COOK of Braintree, in the County of Norfolk, Stonecutter, Plaintiff, vs. PATRICK O'NEAL, formerly of Quincy, now of Lebanon, in the State of New Hampshire, Stonecutter, Defendant, and Quincy Savings Bank, Trustee.

THIS is an action of Assumpsit to recover two hundred dollars alleged to be due to the Plaintiff from the Defendant on the seventeenth day of May, A. D. 1848, as set forth in the Plaintiff's writ of that date. And it appearing to the Court by the suggestion of the Plaintiff that the Defendant is not an Inhabitant of this Commonwealth, nor was resident therein at the time of the service of said Writ—and that he has no last and usual place of abode, tenant, agent or attorney in this Commonwealth known to the Plaintiff or to said Officer, and that no personal service of said writ has been made upon the said O'Neal. It is ordered by the Court here, that the Plaintiff give notice to the Defendant of the pendency of this action, by causing an attested copy of this order to be published in the Quincy Patriot, a newspaper printed in Quincy, once in a week, three weeks successively, the last publication thereof to be thirty days at least, before the THIRD MONDAY of December next. And that this action be continued to the next term of this Court.

READING, Mass.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has leased the Hotel, formerly known as the "Harvard House," in Reading. It is situated on the Turnpike between Reading Village and Andover, nine miles distant from Lawrence, fourteen miles from Boston, and twelve miles from Salem and Lowell. The roads are in good condition, and with pleasant scenery renders the ride agreeable and inviting.

The House has been well furnished, and fitted up with all the most modern improvements; and it will be the aim of the subscriber to manage with reference to the comfort and enjoyment of boarders as well as travellers.

A share of public support is respectfully solicited.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

THE MAN WHO VOTES.

The man who votes unheeding
Of what effects may flow,
From his unthinking negligence
May cause a world of woe.

He only is deserving
That priv'ledge of the free,
Who gives his vote in view of full Responsibility.

Who seeks his country's glory,
Her just well-founded fame,
Will scorn to vote for one whose acts
Would tinge his cheeks with shame.

Can men whose fathers battled
For freedom or their graves,
Sustain the man who owns and rules
Two hundred wretched slaves?

Can men whose fathers valued
Their freedom for an hour
Before a whole eternity
Beneath a tyrant's power,

Sustain the man who meanly
To Freedom's foes would bend,
And at their beck tyranic power
To Freedom's soil extend?

The time may be, hereafter,
When millions of the free,
Will bless his name who now contends
For Truth and Liberty.

Or it may be, hereafter,
That millions doom'd as slaves,
Will curse his name who now the cause
Of Truth and Freedom braves.

Be wary then for Freedom,
A single vote may make
Unnumber'd hearts with joy to leap,
Or with despair to break.

Consider before action,—
Is there a man so base,
Who for a mess of pottage now,
Would doom an unborn race,

To all the ills that slav'ry brings,
To all its countless crimes,
And leave a name to be accurs'd
By all in future times.

Consider well, Electors!
You act for the unborn,
And win the plaudits of the world,
Or meet its bitter scorn.

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

THE WARM, YOUNG HEART.

A beautiful face and form of grace,
Were a pleasant sight to see;
And gold, and gems, and diadems,
Right excellent they be;
But beauty and gold, though both untold,
Are things of a worldly mart;
The wealth that I prize, above ingots or eyes,
Is a heart—a warm, young heart.

O face most fair, shall thy beauty compare
With affection's glowing light?
O riches and pride, how pale ye beside
Love's wealth serene and bright!
I spurn thee away, as a cold thing of clay,
Though gilded and carved thou art;
For all that I prize in its smiles and its sighs,
Is a heart—a warm young heart.

TOGETHER.

The elm tree old, felt lonely and cold,
When wintry winds blew high,
And looking below, he saw in the snow,
The ivy wandering nigh;
And he said, 'Come twine with those tendrils of thine,
My scathed and frozen form;
For heart and hand, together we'll stand,
And mock at the baffled storm—
Ha! ha! together.'

And so, when grief is withering the leaf,
And checking hope's young flower—
And frosts do bite with their teeth so white,
In disappointment's hour;
Though it might overwhelm the ivy or elm,
If alone each stood the strife—
If heart and hand together they stand,
They may laugh at the troubles of life—
Ha! ha! together.

ANECDOTES.

A youngster, not over ten years of age, was seen cramming his mouth full of 'fine cut,' when a gentlemen standing by, somewhat amused by the spectacle, asked him what he chewed tobacco for. 'What do I chaw tobacco for,' replied the boy, 'why, sir, I chaw it to get the strength out of it, to be sure, what d'ye think I chawed it for?'

One Sunday, when the minister of Udney entered the kirk, he was no less surprised than indignant to find that daft 'Jamie Fleming' had taken possession of the pulpit. 'Come doon, Jamie,' said his reverence. 'Come ye up, sir,' answered Jamie; 'they're a stiffnecktt and rebellious generation, sir, an' it will tack us both to manage them.

'How can you be sure that Mrs H. will read this letter,' said one friend to another, who wished to communicate intelligence to a married lady indirectly, 'seeing that you have directed it to her husband?' 'She'll open it to a certainty,' was the reply, 'don't you see I've marked 'private' in the corner?'

'Well, John,' said a man to his son on the day he was one and twenty, 'you have got a fool for a master now.' 'Yes,' said John, 'and have had for these twenty years.'

'Faith,' said an Irishman who could not get into his cabin, his wife having turned the key upon him, 'faith but I'm regularly locked in.' 'In?' said his companion, 'in where?' 'Why in the street!'

NORFOLK COUNTY
Health Insurance Company.
Capital $50,000.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A. S. DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled. MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—from the age of fifteen to forty five years:

Paying $3 a year, draw $2 weekly.

The above Rates are for one year. Insurance can be effected with this Company for two and three years at a small additional premium—no payment is to exceed $400 in any one year.

FEMALES insured for one year only.
Ages fifteen to forty-five.
Paying $2,50 per year, draws $1,50 per week.

Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of

Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all

Diseases of the Blood,

such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated

Dandelion Panacea,

an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibillious remedy on record.

Oleum Jecoris Aselli,
Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,

For Coughs, Bronchetis, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.

The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

THE existence of the innumerable diseases which afflict the human race, appear to be WHOLLY CONCENTRATED, in regard to Malignity, Pain and Distress, to comparatively few in number. For instance, CONSUMPTION and SCROFULA, are either of them particularly horryfying to the feelings of even a careless observer; and to the patient themselves, they are the very realization of a DEATH STRUGGLE.

No Human Science has heretofore been enabled to extirpate these fearful complaints, and it was only by returning to the Simple Resources of the Natural Kingdom, that success has been afforded. BRANT'S INDIAN REMEDIES never have failed to help and cure the sufferer, as is by a succession of witnesses and reference of the Highest Respectability in Character and Influence.

The INCIDENTAL ITEMS in relation to the peculiar action of these remedies in all LUNG, PULMONARY, and ERUPTIVE COMPLAING, are to be found in a Free Pamphlet to be had of the Agents.

BRANT'S
Indian Pulmonary Balsam, is prepared expressly for the cure of CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING, OF BLOOD, PAINS IN THE BREAST, SIDE, OR BACK, and LIVER COMPLAINTS, and

BRANT'S
Indian Purifying Extract,
Is the Chief's Great Purifier of the Blood, and has never failed to cure
SCROFULA, ELYSIPELAS, ULCERATED and NURSING SORE MOUTH, BILES, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, and all Eruptive and Skin Diseases, and by its extraordinary power in regulating and equalizing the circulation,

QUINCY PATRIOT.

Published every Saturday Morning, over Messrs. Josiah Brigham & Co.'s Store, in Hancock Street.

NUMBER 45. QUINCY (MASS.) SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1848. VOLUME 12.

JOHN A. GREEN,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

CONDITIONS.

TWO DOLLARS per annum in advance—Two DOLLARS AND FIFTY CENTS if not paid till the end of six months—THREE DOLLARS if delayed till the expiration of the year.

No subscription nor advertisement will be stopped previous to the payment of all arrearages unless at the option of the proprietor. When subscribers wish their papers discontinued, they will give notice to that effect at the time their subscription expires. Every subscriber will be held responsible for the payment of his paper so long as it is sent to his address at the Post Office, Tavern, or any other place whatsoever he may have ordered it, until legally notified to the contrary.

Advertisements, correctly and conspicuously inserted at the customary prices. The number of insertions required must be marked on the advertisement, otherwise they will be continued until ordered out and charged for accordingly.

The privilege of annual advertisers is limited to their own immediate business; and all advertisements for the benefit of other persons, as well as all legal advertisements, and advertisements of auction sales, sent in by them, must be paid for at the usual rates.

Business letters and communications addressed to the Editor, postage paid, will receive early attention.

☞Single copies of the paper, FIVE CENTS.

ANNEXATION OF TEXAS, &C.

Concluded.

MR. GREEN:—No rational man can doubt for a moment that Mr. Van Buren lost his nomination and election in 1844, on account of the positions he took in relation to the subject of the Annexation of Texas, as expressed in various ways—and the reaffirming those positions in his most eloquent letter of April 20, 1844, insisting that this question had not changed; that a war yet existed between Texas and Mexico. Mr. Van Buren, both in 1837 and 1844, had the able support of the Government organ in Washington. In the "Globe" of the 29th of April, 1844, the editor fully endorses Mr. Van Buren's letter—pronounces it "a production more creditable to his patriotism than had ever been seen"—declares his "demonstrative argument against annexation satisfactory and conclusive." The same paper again, on the 1st of May, 1844, expresses itself as follows.—"We fully and cordially concur with Mr. Van Buren in the views expressed in his letter, and say, it is the only wise, honorable, and practicable course. Texas and Mexico are now at war, and the armistice admits it." On the 4th of May, 1844, the Globe reiterates its position, and charges with great boldness that the story of "British interference was a mere pretext of recent invention." The same party organ so late as 15th of May, 1844, speaking of annexation, and the consequent war, insisted that, "If the General Government should take this step, in violation of the treaty with Mexico, the character of our country would not be left to our posterity as the honorable inheritance, handed down to us by Washington, Jefferson and Jackson."

Mr. Van Buren had also the support of every Democratic paper in the Northern, Northwestern and central states; and also of every leading member of the democratic party in these states.

The ground work of the addresses of the lecturers and agents of that party up to the date of the Baltimore Convention in 1844 was Mr. Van Buren's patriotism and his concurrence in the views of Jefferson and Jackson in relation to the annexation of foreign territory to this Union, and especially the annexation of Texas in violation of the treaty with Mexico. Yes, that pattern, disinterested democrat, Benj. F. Hallet, who did not then nor does not now wish any office, unless, perhaps he could be prevailed upon to take the collectorship of Boston and Charlestown in order to subserve the highest interests of his party, was loud in his denunciations against the admission of Texas, and as loud in his adulations of the truly democratic, and the only constitutional course pursued by Martin Van Buren.

Isaac H. Wright lectured but a few days before the Baltimore Convention, not a hundred miles from this place and raved like a mad man against the admission of Texas, and eulogized Mr Van Buren and pronounced him true to his promise to tread in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor.

This same Wright, of course was honest and disinterested, and did not wish office, although, for his country's good he accepted an office and went to Mexico, to aid Gen. Taylor, Gen. Cushing and others in their wholesale uncalled for and unconstitutional butchery of the innocent Mexicans on their own soil, and having acquired a taste for slaughter and blood, has left the late democratic party and joined the Taylor faction. The course now pursued, (if indeed he has any particular course) by this same "popinjay," would indicate that he now considers the Taylor party the strongest. That Taylor will be elected President of these United States:—and he smells office in the shape of Governor and Commander in Chief of some of the plundered Mexican Territory, or perhaps the office of slave driver—for it must be conceded that to be at the head of three hundred men, women and children, and included in the number some hundred beautiful virgins designed for the Hell's of New Orleans, is an office of high honor. But to return.

The Sentiments uttered by the Washington Globe so fearlessly, were the sentiment of of the entire Northern, Western and Central democratic party. The leaders of that party were not blessed with prophetic vision, and were idly preparing for the great political somerset which they made at the Baltimore convention. Texas was a new article, interpolated in the Democratic creed at Baltimore.

Up to that time it had not been made a test of a man's democracy. There is not a democrat now, nor was not then, North of Mason's and Dixon's line, who will deny, that when Mr. Van Buren's letter of the 20th of April, 1844, came out, followed by the patriotic endorsement of the "Globe" that the doctrines of that letter were not responded to by the great mass of the party. No! A loud political "Amen" was uttered through the ranks: Mr. Van Buren is right: "That is the true ground." And yet can it be believed one month and ten days from that time the orders were countermanded, slavery cried out, "Presto," "Change," "Right about face;" and, with all the subservency of Swiss troops, the putty faced regiments of the North wheeled and countermarched. The Globe was hustled out; the Albany Argus, Boston Post, &c.; ate their own words; and Van Buren the great and good leader of their party, had his head brought to the block; his nomination defeated by slavery and James K. Polk, an almost unheard of and unthought of second rate lawyer, by the same power was nominated, and by that influence elected President. What has followed is known to you all. Texas is annexed and admitted as a state. The South in connection with the dough-faces of the North have done it. I should suppose that the spirits of the thousand who were murdered on the plains of Mexico would haunt the bedsides of all who took a part in the annexation scheme; a parallel of so great an insult on the rights of man, and so completely at variance with the constitution and laws, cannot be found on the pages of the history of any country under Heaven!

The power which adopted the two thirds rule to over throw the most prominant candidate of the democratic party—MARTIN VAN BUREN—in 1844, and placing at the head of the party James K. Polk, the influence and power which defeated the election of Henry Clay in 1844—the power which nominated Lewis Cass at the Baltimore Convention, and Gen Z Taylor at the Philadelphia Chinese Museum mob, is one and the same—viz: the slave power of the South and pro slavery at the North. Freemen of Massachusetts—Freemen of this slave cursed country, awake! AWAKE!!

Monarchies, Kingdoms and Thrones are falling—the old political parties are dead and dying, and thank God, slavery, as anti-democratic and as anti-republican as can possibly be the most absolute monarchy in the land, is yielding, and with the mighty moral and political power, of the only now existing republican party in our loved country—the Free Soil, Free Speech, Free Right of Petition, Freeman and Free Country Party—armed against it, must soon be known only as a scourge which once cursed the land!

Oh! joy to the world! the hour is come,
When the nations of freedom awake,
When the slaveholders and royalists stand dumb,
And with fear and terror shake!

Over the walls of slavery and majesty
"Upharsin" is writ in words of fire—
And the eyes of the bondmen, wherever they be,
Are lit with their wild desire.

Soon shall slavery and all the thrones that blot the world,
Like the throne of France, into the dust be hurled,
And the world roll on, like a hurricane's breath,
Till the fatherest slave, hears what it saith,

ARISE, ARISE, BE FREE!!

Fellow citizens of Norfolk County—Fellow citizens of old Massachusetts—Fellow citizens of the United States, aid by your influence and by your votes in freedom's glorious war! Go not for men but for principles! Go not for a party, but for the country! GO FOR VAN BUREN AND FREE SOIL!! GO FOR ADAMS AND LIBERTY!!! NEPONSET.

For the Quincy Patriot.

TO ANTI-SLAVERY WHIGS.

MR. EDITOR:—Will you be good enough to insert in the Patriot the following reasons, taken from the Lancaster Pa. Examiner, why Anti-Slavery whigs should not vote for Martin Van Buren, and also the annexed letter of General Taylor, in answer to one received some time ago from Hon. Truman Smith, of Connecticut, including some extracts from letters published in the Washington Union of 6th April, stating that Gen. Taylor had declared that "the South would never agree to the Wilmot Proviso"—that "he is in favor of the present tariff, and opposed to a National Bank" —that he thinks the President is not to blame for the war, &c., &c? The old General must have felt indignant when he read those fabrications, so ingeniously contrived by unprincipled politicians, to diminish his popularity with the people. He took his pen and wrote the reply refered to, which Mr Smith has subsequently received authority to publish. A TRUE WHIG.

10 Reasons why Anti-Slavery Whigs should not vote for Van Buren.

Mr Van Buren sanctioned the rule (in Congress) which prohibited the reception of any petition having reference to slavery. This is reason No. 1.

Mr Van Buren sustained to its full extent the 'Atherton gag.' This is reason No. 2.

Mr. Van Buren, when Vice President, gave his casting vote in favor of the bill to rob the mails, and burn all Abolition papers found south of the Potomac. This is reason No. 3.

Mr Van Buren gave his casting vote for the bill which provided for the removal of any postmaser guilty of allowing anti-slavery papers to go into the mails. This is reason No. 4.

Mr. Van Buren solemnly volunteered a pledge to veto any bill in favor of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia. This is reason No. 5.

Mr. Van Buren ordered the Marshal of Connecticut to surrender up the Amistad negroes to an officer of the Navy, that they might be sent back into slavery. This is reason No. 6.

Mr Van Buren instructed our Foreign Ministers to prevent Mexico from entering upon a crusade against Cuba, lest it should lead to the emancipation of the slaves of that island. This is reason No. 7.

Mr Van Buren wrote a letter in favor of the election of Polk. This is reason No. 8.

Mr Van Buren and his barnburner friends, elected Polk, voted to annex Texas, approved the war and stood up for the conquest of New Mexico and California. This is reason No. 9.

Mr. Van Buren now knows that if Polk had not been elected, Texas would not have been annexed, there would have been no war, no sacrifice of human life, and no danger of slavery extension. This is reason No. 10.

If these reasons are not sufficient to induce any anti-slavery man to vote for Van Buren, we cannot imagine where better ones can be found. The only additional one that we can think of is, that as recently as last June, he asserted that "it is now a source of consolation to me that I pursued the course I then adopted.'

Letter of General Zachary Taylor to Mr. Truman Smith of Connecticut.

[PRIVATE.]

BATON ROUGE, (La.) April 27, 1848.

My Dear Sir: I received your letter, and copies of the publications made in the "Union," duly at the hands of Major Bliss.

Those articles, avowing certain sentiments as admitted by myself, are one and all vile fabrications and frauds. When truth forms the basis of attack, I care not how much I and my motives are denounced, but in cases like this I cannot but feel, and openly express, my most honest indignation.

It gives me much pleasure to learn that I have many friends in New England. I have the highest respect for that portion of our country. No section of the Union commands more my admiration for the high intelligence of its people, and their regard to law and order. Among none is there more sobriety of life, and devotion to industry and enterprise, or a more sincere or patriotic wish for the prosperity and reputation of the country, and for a wise and just administration of the Government. I value greatly, therefore, the favorable regard for my nature, which you assure me exists there, and which I hope will ever continue, whatever may be my position before the country.

With sentiments of cordial respect and regard, I remain, dear sir,

Your most obedient servant and friend,

Z. TAYLOR.

SCRIPTURE PARAPHRASED.

And God saw that the wickedness of the whig and democratic parties, was very great in the United States, and that every immagination of their thoughts were evil, and only evil continually.—But Giddings Hale, Phillips, and many other righteous men found grace in the eyes of the Lord. And God said unto them, the end of the whig and democratic parties is come before me; for the land is filled with cruelty, violence and oppression through them; and behold, I God will destroy them!

And then God said unto these righteous men, and their associates, come thou, and all thy friends to the great congregation at Buffalo, for thee and thee only have I found politically righteous in these United States; for yet will I cause a storm to come upon the land, and every whig and every democrat will I destroy from the face of the earth.—And these righteous men did according unto all the Lord commanded them. And Giddings, Hale, Phillips and associates went up to the great gathering—went unto the safe and commodious ark, because of the storm—the tremendous storm which would soon be upon the land!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The storm is now raging with frightful fury; but this righteous, faithful host who took shelter in the Buffalo ark: who planted their feet on the Buffalo foundation—that glorious platform will certainly most triumphantly outride the storm and calmly and peacefully, after the 7th of November, and when the smoke, dust and rubbish of the old political party shall have been cleared away, take the undisputed possession of the politics of this purified and renovated country. And this storm was necessary. God, the Almighty Ruler of nations and of men, see with his omnicient eye that the two great political parties were so corrupt as to endanger the perpetuity of the Republican Institutions of our Union, and in his wisdom has brought upon the land this political revolution—this sudden and unexpected storm! None can doubt that the course pursued, by the two leading political parties of the country for many years, has been anti-republican, adverse to the true principles of government and opposed to the rights of man; and that our civil, moral and religious institutions, which were established at an infinite cost, would soon, unless an Almighty arm interposed, pass away, and "like the baseless fabric of vision, leave not a wreck behind." Hark! Hark!! hear ye not the deafening crash of falling monarchies? Let it be proclaimed through the length and breadth of the land, amid the tottering, falling ruins that the days of Monarchies, Kingdoms and Thrones; the days of the old political parties, and the days of slavery are numbered. And the hand of God is distinctly seen in this movement. It cannot be doubted by the reasoning, candid and thinking portion of the people that the highest interests of this great republic, justice and the rights of man, demanded a political revolution in this country, that this revolution was as necessary, and its results will be as important as are the revolutions in various portions of Europe!

God did not design that the glorious Tree of Liberty should be planted, grow and flourish for a half or a whole century and then wither and die; and with it the bright hopes of the future. No! No!! it was to be transplanted into "Free Soil" where it roots would grow deeper and stronger; and where its branches would spread wider and wider until they should enshade the whole land; and there remain.

Like the tall oak which every blast defies,
Till time's last whirl-wind sweeps the vaulted skies;

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE. By our advertising columns, it will appear that Mr. Hoyt desires to establish a school in this town, for the instruction of the French language. His recommendations embrace the most prominent of the clergymen in town as well as the educational and discriminative portion of the community. May success attend him.

HARD TIMES. We shall be happy to see some of our friends next Tuesday—the Presidential election day, and then we will tell them how we stand and shall vote.

THE MERCHANT'S MAGAZINE AND HON. MR. CLAY. "Aladdin," says the New York Evening Mirror, "the well-known writer of the money articles in Douglas Jerrold's Weekly Newspaper, (London,) in a paper entitled Free Traders' and Currency Reformers, which appeared in that journal of the 7th October, after quoting a passage from a speech of Henry Clay, in confirmation of some of his views, goes on to say introductory to a citation 'of the most striking and instructive passages from a recent article' in Hunt's Magazine.

"Mr. Clay does not stand alone. High as his authority and influence stand, Hunt's Merchant's Magazine of New York stand higher. It expresses the opinions of all who are most intelligent in commercial affairs, and even while following, guides public opinion."

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES. The Boston Bee extracts from the Newark Daily Advertiser a curious tabular calculation, showing the comparative expenditures of the United States Government, under the several Presidents, by the year, month, day, hour and minute. For the purpose of comparison the expenditure by minute is the most striking, and therefore copies this part of the table.

Washington, per minute,		$3,82
John Adams,	"	2,58
Jefferson,	"	9,95
Madison,	"	34,88
Monroe,	"	25,18
J. Q. Adams,	"	24,45

RECEIPTS OF BREADSTUFFS. The receipts of breadstuffs in Boston, for the past three days of the present week, have been 12,782 barrels of flour by water, and 8793 by railroad—of corn, 35,000 bushels—of wheat 9187 bushels.

APPOINTMENTS. The Governor and Council have made the following appointments:—Richard Fletcher of Boston, to be a Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, in place of Charles E. Forbes, resigned. George B. Emerson, of Boston, to be a member of the Board of Education, in place of Joseph W. Ingraham, deceased. W. H. A. Crary of Fall River, to be a Superintendent of alien passengers for Fall River.

RAILWAYS LIABLE FOR DAMAGE BY FIRE. The Supreme Court of this Commonwealth have given judgment in favor of the Springfield Mutual Insurance Company against the Western Railroad, for the amount of $623,60, with $167,65 interest—the first named sum being the amount paid by the Insurance Company for the burning of a house in 1845, which was set on fire by a locomotive of the Western Railroad.

ACCIDENTS. Several accidents occurred on 'Celebration Day.' A lad was run over by a cab, receiving a severe contusion on the head, and two men were badly injured by the premature discharge of a cannon. One of them, it is thought, will lose one of his eyes.

POPULATION, ETC., OF DORCHESTER. We have received a statistical table prepared by Otis Shepard, Esq. of Dorchester, by which it appears that the population of that town, taken since the 1st of May last, is 7386. The number of persons between the ages of four and sixteen, is 1659. The number of births in the town between the 1st of May, 1847, and the 1st of May, 1848, was 262—males 133, females 129. The number of deaths in the town for the same time, was 183; a larger number, by fifty, than ever occurred in one year. The increase in population since 1840, eight years, is 2511.

THIRTY-FIRST CONGRESS. Ten States have elected their members of Congress, and the account stands thirty one whigs in the next congress, to thirty three in the present, and forty six democrats to forty four in the present Congress.

SHIPWRECK. The brig Carmelita of Bangor, bound to Boston, from Fayal, with a cargo of oil, wines, etc, and having thirteen passengers, was abandoned in a sinking condition on the 29th of September, having capsized in a heavy gale, drowning nine passengers and a seaman. Twelve persons were saved.

HON. HARRISON GRAY OTIS. This distinguished person died at his residence in Boston on the 28th ult., in the eighty-fourth year of his age. His intellectual faculties were bright and vigorous to the last, and he died without pain. Mr. Otis has filled many important public offices. He has represented this State in both houses of Congress. He was appointed District Attorney under John Adams; was subsequently a member of the celebrated Hartford Convention; was a President of our State Senate, Judge of the Boston Court of Common Pleas, and the third Mayor of Boston.

Gen. Taylor has been offered one thousand dollars for his favorite war horse, 'Old Whitey,' but refused it.

Gen. Percifer F. Smith will shortly take his departure from New York for California, to assume the duties of Governor. A regiment of United States troops, intended to maintain authority in the new territory, is now quartered at Fort Hamilton, New York, and will soon leave for the Pacific.

The New York Commercial Advertiser, says that the banks of that city, in consequence of a recent legal decision, decline collecting bills or drafts drawn at sight, unless the words "without grace" are inserted in them.

Pecan Nuts are obtained in great profusion in the forests of Western Texas. The crop this year is unusually large, and almost, if not fully, equal in value to the entire cotton crop of that State.

It is a most extraordinary fact, that within the space of sixty years, all the monarchs of France, viz: Louis the XVI. Napoleon Bonaparte, Louis the XVIII, Charles the X, and Louis Philippe were dethroned.

In a cigar shop in Parliamen street, London, the following notice is posted: "Credit given to gentlemen, but cash expected from members of Parliament."

A Branch Post Office, has been established at East Boston, to be opened only on the days when the steamers sail. Letters will be received to the moment of sailing.

The Secretary of the Treasury has given orders for the payment of the Mexican indemnity. Eight hundred thousand will be paid in New York; four hundred thousand in Boston, and three hundred thousand in Philadelphia, making an aggregate of $1,500,000.

An old lady being late at church, entered as the congregation were rising for prayer. "La don't rise on my accunt," said she courteseying.

The New York Sun says that Theodore Parker, in a late sermon, asserted that there was a court in Boston containing several tenements, each containing several families; and that of the children born in this court, one half were born blind, and the eyes of the other half were more or less defective.

Blessed are they that are deaf; for they never need lend money, nor listen to tedious stories.

It is a good sign to see a man sit at a second story window over the sidewalk of a thronged street, and spit out without noticing whether people are provided with umbrellas or not. It is an indisputable evidence that he doesn't defile the carpet.

A CARD.

The subscriber most greatfully tenders his thanks to the citizens of Neponset Village and vicinity, and also to the fire department of Dorchester, who were promptly on hand; but feels to express his heart felt gratitude to the Neponsate fire company, whose prompt and energetic exertions alone, saved his dwelling house from the devouring element.

We are daily receiving testimony like the following, from the North, South, East and West:

Gentlemen—I was afflicted with the Asthma for fourteen years, and had tried every remedy in the country; I had also been to several physicians, and found no relief whatever. I was afflicted at times so severely, that the blood would gush from my nose, and my breathing was difficult. Indeed the disease had gained so much on me that I despaired of ever getting well, when I chanced to get a bottle of which effected a perfect cure, and I now consider myself perfectly sound. This can be proved by numbers of men in Franklin County and vicinity, and I think it my duty to let it be known.

There's no mistake about it.

What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.

A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.

Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it :
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.

RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it ;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

THERE'S POISON IN THE CANN.

I blame not those of former days,
Who pass'd the bowl around;
'Twas deem'd an act deserving praise
To make the drink abound.

And each one took the flowing can,
And felt the spirit yearn
Towards the generous hearted man
Who treated well in turn.

And he was called a niggard soul
Who treated but in part;
For by the measure of his bowl
They judged the donor's heart.

But times have changed we all do know,—
There's poison in the cann;
A curse that neither friend or foe
Should give his fellow man.

The rifle or the sword unriven,
May leave the immortal mind,
But rum blights all that God has given
And leaves no hope behind.

Yet some will sell the wild fire still
Tho' numerous hearts they break;
Will life and reputation kill
For filthy lucre's sake.

Avoid them as you would the den
Where pirate's have control;
For tho' they bear the forms of men
They lack the human soul.

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

THE WORLD IS BEFORE THEE.

The wide world is before thee,
Go revel in its blaze;
Life's sunshine may restore thee
The smile of happy days.
I would not in thy bosom
One bitter thought should spring;
Be like the treasured blossom
That wears no secret sting.

Soon very strong emotion
Shall droop within thy breast;
The fiercest storms of ocean
At last are lulled to rest,
And o'er the changed scene stealing
A cheering beam appears;
So, in the work of feeling,
Hope follows after fears.

A FRAGMENT.

It may be glorious to write
Thoughts that shall glad the two or three High souls, like those far stars that come to sight
Once in a century.

But better far it is to speak
One simple word, which now and then
Shall waken their free nature to the weak
And friendless sons of men.

To write some earnest verse or line,
Which, seeking not the praise of Art,
Shall make a clearer faith and manhood shine
In the unlearned heart.

THE LABORER.

Ay! stand erect! nor bend thy knee, nor bow,
But speak thine own free thoughts; and with an eye
Bold as an eagle's cleaving the bright sky,
Hold upward thy proud way! Oh, why shouldst thou,
Whose iron arm hath made the mighty world
A realm of beauty, and subdued the wave,
O'er desert vales and mountain heights unfurled
The flag of Hope, why shouldst thou like a slave,
Cringe to the nod of Pride, and bend thee low,
Even on the soil thy hand hath taught to bloom
As a fair garden; wherefore shouldst thou so
Bow down, and shut thy soul as in a tomb?
Oh, stand erect! throw fetters off and ban,
And speak thine own free thoughts—thou art a MAN!

ANECDOTES.

'Why bless me Mrs. Jones, you don't look well this afternoon. You hant fever and agur, has you?'

'No marm, but I'm very unhappy; my usband tells me the crisis has arrived.'

'The crisis, why, it aint possible! When did he hear that?'

'Oh, it was in everybody's mouth, he says, at the political meeting t'other night and they all seemed mightily consarned about it.'

'Well, now that I recollect it, my old man read it from the paper, night afore last, that it had arrived sure enough and the editor seems to be in a peck of trouble about it too.'

'Goodness gracious! what'll we do?'

'I haint an ideat, unless the Governor calls out the militiar.'

'Jonathan, did you read that story about the man as was hugged to death by a bear?'

'Guess I did, Sewke, and it made me feel so bad.'

'Why, how did you feel Jonathan?'

'Kind'er sort'er as if I'd like to hug you een-amost to death, too, you tarnal, nice, pump elegant little critter, you Sewke.'

'O ha! Go away you Jonathan.'

'It's quite too bad of you, Darby, to say that your wife's worse than the devil.' 'As please your reverence, I can prove it from Scripture. Didn't your reverence yesterday, in your sermon, tell us that, if we resist the Devil he'll flee from us? Now if I resist my wife she flies at me.'

'Do you see that fellow lounging there doing nothing?' said Owen to Jenks the other day. 'How does he live? by his wits?' 'Oh, no; he is a cannibal!' 'A cannibal?'. 'Yes a cannibal—he lives on other people!'

The New York papers tell a good story of a man, who being taken ill, was told that nothing would save him but to drink a quart of catnip tea. 'Then I must die,' said the poor man, 'for I don't hold but a pint.'

'Ah! my good fellow, where have you been for a week back?' 'For a weak back? I'm not troubled with a weak back, I thank you.' 'No, no, I mean where have you been for so long back?' 'Long back? Don't call me long back, you scoundrel.'

Boston, Sept., 24. tf

NORFOLK COUNTY
Health Insurance Company.
Capital $50,000.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A. S. DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled. MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—from the age of fifteen to forty five years:

Paying $3	a year,	draw	$2	weekly.

Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of

Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all

Diseases of the Blood,

such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated

Dandelion Panacea,

an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibilious remedy on record.

Oleum Jecoris Aselli,
Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,

For Coughs, Bronchetis, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.

The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

THE existence of the innumerable diseases which afflict the human race, appear to be WHOLLY CONCENTRATED, in regard to Malignity, Pain and Distress, to comparatively few in number. For instance, CONSUMPTION and SCROFULA, are either of them particularly horrifying to the feelings of even a careless observer; and to the patient themselves, they are the very realization of a DEATH STRUGGLE.

No Human Science has heretofore been enabled to extirpate these fearful complaints, and it was only by futurning to the Simple Resources of the Natural Kingdom, that success has been afforded. BRANTS INDIAN REMEDIES never have failed to help and cure the sufferer, as is by a succession of witnesses and reference of the Highest Respectability in Character and Influence.

THE TWICE WON.

CHAPTER I.

Max Kermon, the old hunter, at last settled down within the reach of civilization. In youth a voyager among Canadians, in after life a trapper without society except the occasional companionship of a few chance comrades, he was wholly wedded to a wild life, and inwardly pined when the infirmities of age compelled him to return to his kind, and wear social fetters. There was another motive, as it seemed to others, which, however, had little weight with him. His wanderings were not entirely solitary. For many years he had been accompanied by a beautiful, wild-hearted girl, the sole offspring of the only marriage the free trapper had ever contracted. People thought that as his daughter approached womanhood, Max would naturally wish to give her the advantages of education and society. But he had no such thought. These things were of little importance in his own views, or indeed in those of his daughter, as he very well knew, but Max was too sensible not to feel that his natural life must soon terminate, and that the desert was not the most fitting home for an unprotected, friendless girl. So he settled himself quietly as near the wilderness as possible, and became the oracle to all lovers of forest-craft. His nature was better pleased with this amphibious life than if he had existed in a wholly uncongenial element.

Diane Kermon inherited from her mother, the daughter of a Canadian voyager, both a name and the roaming spirit of that race. From the days of earliest recollection, she had been at her father's side on the wild prairie or ranging over desert mountains, and sometimes, too, her courage was tried in hours of danger. The bold hunter delighted in nothing more than predatory skirmishing with the Indians, who on their part, were wont to acknowledge the debt with interest. Once, with but two comrades at his back, he was surrounded in his trapping lodge, and forced to stand a week's siege. The fearless conduct of his daughter, child as she was, won from him a hunter's praise and fatherly pride. Yet though without fear at the sight of blood, she shuddered at its effusion. The little girl who so courageously garrisoned one side of their little hut, was a true woman after all. That was a singular training which she received; wandering over an uninhabited country with a rude trapper; shut out from education and only taught to read and write by an accidental residence for a few weeks at a Jesuit mission; without means of refinement, and having for the language of her mind only what could be learned from the voice of nature in her deepest seclusions. This she could understand vaguely,

"——and the heart of the maiden
Swelled and obeyed its power like the tremulous tides of the ocean."

She loved the green woods and mighty forests, for there her soul could live beyond the rough influences of the only life she had ever known. Hours passed away, and she would linger, as much rapt in her woodland teachings as when she first entered the pleasing solitude, leaving the rude camp and its life far behind. Perhaps she was better educated thus than if she had been taught to cultivate her mind by harsh mathematics, her religion from a pulpit in some anti-christian church, or her affections from fashionable novels. Yet there certainly were defects in this primitive system. Though the faith which nature taught her was childlike and pure, the trainings of her soul lofty and wide as the forests themselves, this was not all of her life. Hours passed away, and she would linger, as much rapt in her woodland teachings as when she first entered the pleasing solitude, leaving the rude camp and its life far behind. Perhaps she was better educated thus than if she had been taught to cultivate her mind by harsh mathematics, her religion from a pulpit in some anti-christian church, or her affections from fashionable novels. Yet there certainly were defects in this primitive system. Though the faith which nature taught her was childlike and pure, the trainings of her soul lofty and wide as the forests themselves, this was not all of her life. Days and nights by camp-fires, the little intercourse ever enjoyed, and that solely with half-civilized beings, the constant weapons and death, had all given an unnatural turn to a spirit originally bold, and taught her ignorance to believe that manliness lay only in skill with the rifle, or strength with athletic feats. An unnatural character, perhaps. But place her two lovely namesakes in the same situation, bold Diane of Poiters, and that better creation of fancy, dashing Die Vernon, and, my life for it, the insignificant daughter of a trapper would well compare with either.

Such was her character when old Max Kermon, exchanging his semi-barbarism for the half-civilization of a western frontier, found as little difference between his old and new situations as might have been expected. In fine days he hunted, in unpleasant weather perched on a settee with a pipe he told huge stories of old adventures. Of course, books and bookmen were contemptible in his eyes, and equally of course they were worthless in her sight, for she had never known them. She mingled but little with those about her, and spent most of the leisure time alone with her musings in some favorite retreat.

She was very beautiful. Long exposure to the sun had veiled but not hidden her fair complexion with a rich olive, and indeed, as with more fashionable ladies, the veil added to her charms. Constant exercise had given firmness and elasticity to her limbs. No wonder then that she was the belle of the village, even though rarely seen, and still more rarely addressed. Suitors came for her hand and were repulsed. The bold and venturous she instinctively disliked for the coarseness which generally characterised them; the few of a different stamp who sought her, she did not take the trouble to notice, thinking them hardly worthy of the name of men. Of this latter number, the most prominent was James Charlton, a young lawyer who had just opened his lawyer's office in that village. It is no wonder that with her views of bookmen, she rarely thought of him who would come nearest to that class of any she had ever known. In that single word was comprised all of Charlton's character, so far as it had yet been developed. Educated at an eastern university, and naturally of a retired cast of mind, he had always avoided the world, and lived only with his books. In being obliged to fall back on them for support, he met the fate which usually attends men of this stamp, whom the world does not understand. But a part only of his character had appeared. A little intercourse with the world would soon teach him how to know and be known; after that, his talents were a sure guaranty of success. In his eyes the beautiful forest girl was the one whom philosophers had always admired and vainly sought to find. He determined to be more fortunate and secure the reality of the child freshness, while they could only conceive the ideal. Luckily he saw his deficiencies, and resolved to amend them, so that she could at least think of him, and after that—his sanguine nature hoped the rest.

CHAPTER II.

Old Max Kermon suddenly took it into his head that eighteen was the proper age for marriage, and bluntly told his daughter so, who on her part received it with a feeling that she could hardly understand. Marriage she had always looked upon as a necessary evil which all must some time endure, and in her few dreams of the future husband destined for herself, had pictured him as a bold, wild, frank-hearted man, differing from her father only in years. All of this class whom she had hitherto known, seemed to lack something—she could hardly tell what—and the fact induced fears for her future happiness. However, she hoped for good fortune, and thought little more on the subject.

The hunter was determined that none but a man after his own heart should possess his daughter, and almost the only qualification necessary according to his views were strength and agility in manly sports. He took no pains to conceal his determination, and it was surprising how suddenly such games rose in favor with the young men of the village and vicinity. Among so many it was somewhat difficult to distinguish the foremost, and yielding to the general desire, Max Kermon appointed a particular day for the contest, with the understanding that the victor should be backed by his favor. Diane protested at first against this primitive plan, but the old man was resolute and she yielded. If the truth must be told, she too felt an interest in these proofs of manhood, and was quite willing to accept the victor of the day as, her husband, provided he was not too far below the standard she had mentally fixed.

At last the day came, and with a crowd of young men about him, Max measured off the ground of contest, and made every necessary arrangement. There were fair girls, too, present at the scene; blooming western damsels, drawn together by the excitement of those rustic lists, or perhaps anxious to see what favored one would be removed from that very necessary class—their beaux. There were but two exercises, one of leaping and one of mere strength. Old Max himself led off the first, and grumbled because his stiffened limbs could not carry him beyond fourteen feet, four less, as he bitterly exclaimed, than he could leap in his youth. Then came the others, one by one, and with different success. Some fifteen feet, some sixteen, two seventeen, one luckless boy only thirteen. another, more fortunate than the rest, a perfect Ajax in limb, reached seventeen and three quarters. This settled the question, and all turned their attention to the second trial. Just at this time the young lawyer, Charlton, came up, and gazed upon the proceedings with quiet indifference.

A bar was fastened firmly between two parallel posts at a distance of full four feet above the reach of a man from the ground. The candidates were to leap up, catch with both hands, and then, after heavy weights had been attached to their feet in this position, slowly raise their shoulders till they touched the bar, then drop and hang by a single hand. The one who could cling longest thus was the winner of a wife. Fewer tried this game than the other, for it required great muscular strength, and besides, the immense limbs of the former winner seemed to settle the question. with the weights attached he remained in the air just twelve minutes, a third longer than any other had done. He descended with an air of triumph that became a sneer when Charlton stepped forward and deliberately prepared for the spring. Max rubbed his eyes, and Diane herself surveyed the young lawyer thoroughly—a mark of interest she had never before shown. He seemed powerfully formed, though by no means as large in bulk as his chief rival. Yet every limb appeared to be in its proper place and well set.

With a light spring he gained the bar, raised himself, when the weights were attached, till his breast touched it, and then hung motionless without any apparent effort. Nine, ten minutes passed away and he did not stir; twelve, and he seemed to quiver slightly; thirteen, and he drew out his watch with a calm smile, saying:

'I suppose it is unnecessary for me to remain here any longer. Will some one unfasten the weights?'

He dropped lightly down.

'Bravely done!' said Max, 'done like a man, my boy, but why didn't you try to leap?'

Charlton marked the ground with a wary eye, and then rose nimbly from the starting place.

'Right in the tracks!' cried the old hunter, 'ah, if you had risen a little higher, you would have struck two inches ahead. No matter though, it's enough to be even with him on this. you beat him on the other as neatly as I ever saw anything done.'

Notwithstanding his admiration of these proofs of Charlton's manliness, the old man seemed somewhat dissatisfied with the idea of marrying his daughter to a lawyer. The young man whom Charlton had so eclipsed, was evidently his first choice. Suddenly his face brightened as he turned to the rivals and said:

'Come, boys, you're even on the jumping—let's have a little rifle practice to settle that part. Another trial will do you no harm. Two shots each, remember.'

The Ajax briskly approved this plan with a triumphant glance at Charlton. He well knew that the young lawyer had not reckoned on this, or even trained himself very particularly with the rifle. The other looked surprised and annoyed, but made no useless opposition.

A painted nail was partly driven into a tree at long shot distance as the mark. Charlton fired with great care, but missed it by at least a foot. His rival shot next, and with better success, for his bullet struck within an inch of the nail. The old hunter rubbed his hand and seizing a rifle took rapid aim. The nail was driven right into the tree. Charlton had the next shot, and noticed that Max had raised his rifle rapidly until the instant of pressing the trigger, imitated the motion precisely, trusting in his own quick eye, and somewhat in fortune too. The marker at the tree announced that the new nail had been slightly struck on the edge of the head and bent double. The last shot was close, but did not quite touch the mark.

This was more than the defeated man could endure. He shook his clenched fist at Charlton, and throwing himself into his favorite fighting position, with bent head sprang for the other's breast. Charlton's hands were as quick as his eye, and stepping a little aside, he grasped the other's waist while yet in air, and with a slight whirl, compelled him to execute a somerset on nothing, and then fall on his back, wildly counting the afternoon stars.

He rose and looked sullen for a moment, then grasping Charlton by the hand, saying, as only a western man can say, 'Lawyer! that was nicely done. You are my friend, take her.'

All congratulated the lucky victor. Old Max shook him warmly by the hand, and the fair prize beamed a sweet smile on her fortunate winner. The object for which he had spent long hours of painful labor, was now gained, and he called himself a happy man.

For a month he daily visited her abode and chatted with the old hunter, or more commonly walked out with the daughter. Yet not a word did he speak of marriage, for to confess the truth, though his love had increased, Charlton was disappointed. He found even more than he had expected—a noble but unformed soul, lofty thoughts but undirected and wandering—but closer views showed him the folly of his ideal. With all a lover's ardor, he had not patience to await the full development of her mind, and expected it to burst at once from ignorance. Yet she was an apt scholar, and after overcoming her first aversion to books and bookmen, made rapid progress. Indeed, he hardly knew that his affection was returned, so absorbed was she in her new pursuit, and he could not bear to wait until she had attained his standard of perfection, much less think of marriage before that time. He was unreasonable.

Charlton suddenly disappeared. He foolishly thought his attachment ill-directed, and strove to escape even from its memory.

CHAPTER III.

The poor girl waked from her dream of happiness—a dream where new thoughts and new lights were continually opening before her—to find her guide and teacher gone. So occupied had she hitherto been in the strange surprise of her mind's first awakening that she had hardly thought of him, except gratefully, as an instrument of delight. Certainly there was nothing in their first meeting to awaken love, and since that time she had been too busy to dream of it. His unaccountable departure showed her that these delights had always been associated with him, and were incomplete without his presence. Yet the pride native to her bosom was untamed, and his abrupt, insulting desertion prevented her from making any manifestation of sorrow. She returned to her books and old haunts again, somewhat sadder perhaps, but with the same enthusiasm as before.

Nearly two years passed, and she still remained unmarried. Time had fully developed her mind, and could James Charlton have seen her now in her intelligent beauty, he would have sorely repented his self-banishment. Old Max was furious at first, but soon settled his mind by reflecting that, after all, a lawyer was not the best suited to his taste. Besides, he had lately selected a new son-in-law, whom he vainly sought to commend to his daughter's favor. This was a young hunter, just returned from an expedition to the far western trapping-grounds, who had won the old man's heart by his hunting stories and skill with the rifle. He was a fine, handsome fellow too, much darkened by exposures, but manly in his bearing and frank address. Yet, as Diane always avoided him, he had never been able to exchange a word with her.

One day she sought a favorite shade more dear to her, because on that very spot was her last meeting with Charlton. She tried to read but in vain; one thought alone filled her mind, and she threw aside her book to think of him. Hour after hour passed without her moving, though love and pride were struggling with her heart. She heard a slight noise, and listlessly looked up, then came suddenly the report of a rifle, a yell of agony, and the quick crashing of some heavy body through the branches. A large catamount, knotted up and fighting with death, fell at her feet just as a man leaped from the bushes and dispatched it by a blow with his rifle. He was her father's favorite, the young hunter.

It was no time for mere compliments, and they exchanged none. She thanked her preserver in simple heart-felt words, and he replied with strange embarrassment for one who was usually so ready in his language. He first stammered out something about the fortunate accident that had brought him so near her, then suddenly changing his tone, as if recollecting himself, entered into conversation with his fair companion that strangely surprised her. She had always supposed him as rude as his fellows, but he now spoke with an easy elegance that showed not merely a familiarity with the best society, but with that also which forms the refinement of society, with the production of master men. She was charmed and bewildered. No such elegance had ever reached her, except when poured from the lips of the lost Charlton. On her part, she entered into the spirit, which breathed from all his words, and replied in a manner that astonished her new friend as much probably as he had dazzled her. They talked thus long and fervently. Mind had met kindred mind, and each was loth to shorten the communion. At last he stopped and mused for a few moments, then looked at her fixedly with a strange yet frank smile, began to speak of love—of his own love to her.

She started at the word and the image of Charlton seemed rising up to rebuke the past hours of happiness. This new acquaintance was fascinating but her heart was already occupied. She was surprised too at his abrupt introduction of the subject, but could not be offended with him who had preserved her from a fearful death. Still she spoke gravely and severely, expressing astonishment at his singular avowal, and a request that she might be pained with it no more.

'You love another, then. Remember that I preserved your life!'

His words might have been insulting, but not in the tone he used, or with that same unaccountable, winning smile upon his face. Thrown off her reserve by this bold language she replied hurriedly,

'What you have said is true. You have preserved my life, and I owe you all gratitude and friendship. But I also owe a richer, deeper debt to another. He found me ignorant, and taught me how to feel and know what I felt. He translated for me the mysterious teachings of nature, which I had often faintly heard, but could never understand. He gave me a new life; you have merely preserved it. Ought I not then to love him, and not blush at the avowal? While he exists I will think of no other—live for no other but him.'

While she spoke these passionate and unguarded words, the hunter was regarding her with the same curious, provoking smile, such as hardly seemed to befit the mouth of a rejected lover. She turned away with burning cheek and would have left him there, but he lightly detained her and said,

'This was Charlton, the lawyer?'

She looked into his face and finding that its expression had changed to an earnest yet not intrusive anxiety, replied without hesitation,

'It is.'

'Blessings on you for that word!' cried the hunter, winding his arm around her waist, 'I am that foolish man who doubted your love.'

He drew her to his bosom, and she here forgave his former desertion.

Useful Hint about Cholera. A writer in a weekly medical journal, who saw much of the cholera in 1832 and 1834, suggests a very simple and, as he asserts, a very valuable prevention against the susceptibility of the disease. The weakened state of the stomach, he says, which predisposes to cholera, is so decidedly obviated by eating freely of common salt with our meals, that it is believed that three-fourths of the cases which would otherwise occur may be prevented by this simple addition to our food. The writer recommends for an adult a ninth part of an ounce (about a small tea-spoonful) three times a day, at breakfast, dinner, tea or supper. It may be eaten with fish, animal food, poultry, game, bread, toast, or bread and butter, The same beneficial result is not obtained with salted meats, broths, soups, etc, in which salt is dissolved; because by the action of heat, or long admixture of the salt with other matter, a change is produced in its properties, and the preventive power, with reference to this particular use of it, destroyed. When cholera prevailed in London, the writer was constantly exposed to its influence, and only used the above proventive measure. The beneficial effect of this plan probably depends, first, upon the salt stimulating the digestive organs to produce a perfect digestion and assimilation of the food; and, secondly, upon maintaining a more than usually saline condition of the blood; for it is well known that one of the earliest effects of cholera is to deprive the blood of its saline materials.—Foreign paper.

What fine Fruits have sprung from. The Peach, originally, was a poisonous almond. its flesh parts were then used to poison arrows and it was for this purpose introduced into Persia. The transplanting cultivation, however, not only removed its poisonous qualities, but produced the delicious fruit we now enjoy.

The Nectarine and Apricot are natural hybridations between the peach and plum.

The Cherry was originally a berry-like fruit and cultivation has given each berry a separate stem, and improves its quality. The common mazzard is the original of most of the present kind of cherries.

The common wild Pear is even inferior to the chock pear, but still, by cultivation, it has come to rank among our finest fruits.

The Cabbage originally came from Germany, and is nothing more than common sea kale. Its cultivation has produced the present cabbage, and its different acclimatings, the different kinds; while the hybridations with other similar plants has produced the Cauliflower.

This shows the benefits of cultivation in the vegetable world; but the change which cultivation has effected in the mind of man is infinitely greater.

Making a "V." A story is told of an auctioneer who was provokingly annoyed, while in the exercise of his profession, by the ludicrous bids of a fellow whose sole object seemed to be to make sport for the buyers, rather than himself to buy. At length, enraged beyond endurance, the knight of the ivory headed hammer, looking around the room for a champion to avenge his wrongs, fitted his eyes upon a biped of huge dimensions, a very monarch in strength and cried out:

'Marlow, what shall I give you to put that fellow out?'

'I take one five dollar bill.'

'Done, done, you shall have it.'

Assuming the ferocious, knitting his brows, spreading his nostrils like a lion's, and putting on the wolf all over his head and shoulders, old Marlow strode off to the aggressor, and seizing the terrified wretch by the collar, said to him in a whisper that was heard all over the room—

'My good friend; you go out with me, I give you half the money!'

'Done, done,' said the fellow.

'Hurrah! hurrah!' shouted the audience. The auctioneer had the good sense to join in the laugh, and coolly forked out the V.

Hints to the Rich. God has prospered you and is still abundantly prospering you. When counting up your gains, when looking on your wealth and splendor, when sitting in your beautiful Temple, and rejoicing amid rich religious privileges, O think of the destitute, millions on millions! Remember, God is no respecter of persons; he loves them as well as you; his sun shines as brightly on their fields; the Savior embraced them in his last messages, and his gospel can prepare them, as well as you, for his second coming in glory. Enter, then, fully into his great plan of mercy, and rest not till he has the whole earth for possession.—Rev. B. Dizon.

Fashion. While Queen Victoria was in the Highlands she one day tied the veil of her hat under her chin, as it was rather chilly weather. Forthwith every lady the country round, adopted the style, and in the hottest days of summer loyally sweltered away in honor of their queen.

THIRD PARTIES.

MR. EDITOR—As there are great efforts making in the political world, at this time, to organize and build up a new and third party in the country, under the name of Free Soil, I have supposed that it might be desirable for the people to know what Hon. Charles Francis Adams, the candidate of a third party for Vice President of the United States, has said upon this subject, as no man in the State has written harder things than he has against third party organizations. Mr. Adams, two years ago, was the editor of a paper in the city of Boston, called the Daily Whig. In that paper of June 27th, 1846, he says that "nothing can come of third parties but destruction," and in the Whig of July 9th, 1846, he published a long article upon 'third parties' from which I would make a few extracts. In the Essex Transcript, a weekly Liberty party paper, in Amesbury, John G. Whittier published an article in favor of the Liberty party. To this article Mr. Adams replied in the Whig as follows:

'We are among those who sincerely believe that third parties are productive of a much greater share of evil to the community than they be of good. Experience as well as common sense go to prove that the real division of every free people must be into two parties, and that in the hands of one or the other of these two must the administration of public affairs be made to rest. The division comes naturally, as the offspring of the two conflicting principles which have ever since its foundation been found in the world of good and evil, of movement and rest, of purity and corruption.

'Holding these views of life, it seems to us that there is no choice presented to the judgment of any man in political affairs other than this. Either to take no active part at all, and to retire into other fields of meditation or of duty, or else to make up his mind to side with one or the other of the two great masses into which his fellow men will be divided.

'It is comparatively easy to break at once from a party, and throw off all responsibility whatever for any direction that may be given to the public opinion, and to gain a considerable share of personal notoriety in leading a new movement, to what it is to remain partially discriminated in the mass of an old party, to struggle with the fixed impressions of a large majority with the settled interest of a great number, and with the selfish passion of a few. A purely ambitious man would take the former road as the immediate avenue to distinction, whilst he would shun the latter as savoring too much of self denial and of sacrifice.

'We fully understand with what it is we have in an humble way undertaken to contend. With our whig friends on many points we entirely agree—on others, we come nearer to them than to their opponents. If on a few we go beyond them or at least a very considerable part of them, is that any reason why in a fit of impatience because they will not take our dictation, we should fly off to a less eligible part to act with others with whom, in the long run, we are likely to agree even less?

'The error of the third party—to which the writer to whom we now address ourselves belongs—appears to us to consist in too great impatience to reach at great results. It takes years and years to move public sentiments in favor of the very best abstract principle. They expect to do it at once. They quarrel with their neighbors, because they could not at once see the truth as they did. What is the result? Have they brought forward as candidates for public office any better men than they could have relied upon in the whig party? Have they done so much to advance their principles as those whom they left to contend at greater disadvantage for that desertion among the whigs? For us to leave the whig party in order to join the Liberty party, would be in our opinion to go farther and fare worse. Our friend from Amesbury may depend upon it, that in New England and indeed throughout all the free States more may be done by steady and persevering effort in the legitimate channels of existing parties, than by any individual defections, with all the inevitable suspicions of purity and honest purpose which follow in their train.'

Such were the views entertained by Charles F. Adams two years ago, relative to third parties, and now we see him laboring with all his efforts, in connection with such men as Stephen C. Phillips, Charles Allen and Charles Sumner to organize and build up a third political party in this State and through the country, notwithstanding he says nothing but destruction comes from third parties. Now seeing such men who have always heretofore acted with the whig party, breaking off and separating themselves from their former friends and associates, we are naturally led to inquire what can be the motive and object which has induced them to take this strange and inconsistent course, and we are irresistably impelled to conclude that we may say of them as Mr. C. F. Adams said of Mr. Van Buren, they are 'fixed to their own interest,' and they are flattered with the prospect of receiving a just reward. Charles Francis Adams, for his great zeal and devotion to the cause of the new party has been nominated by said party as a candidate for Vice President of the United States, and Stephen C. Phillips as his reward for like zeal and devotion has been nominated for Governor of Massachusetts in opposition to the able, pure and faithful George N. Briggs; and Charles Allen and Charles Sumner as a remuneration for their labors have been nominated as candidates for Representatives to Congress. Now in the language of Mr. Adams, have the Free Soil party 'brought forward as candidates for public office any better men than they would have relied upon in the whig party'? I would like to ask that portion of the Free Soil party who have heretofore voted with the whig party and who now think of voting on Monday next for Phillips and Mills in preference to voting for Briggs and Reed, if any such there be, upon what ground they in their consciences can oppose the re-election of Gov. Briggs who has discharged the duties of the office of Chief Magistrate with such signal ability and universal satisfaction, and who has ever been a consistant and fearless advocate of all moral reforms, of the cause of Temperence, of Education, of Religion, and human Freedom. I trust there are no whigs in Quincy who have ever supported Gov. Briggs and Lt. Gov. Reed, will, upon mature reflection, cast their votes against them on Monday, but will go and vote for the regular whig nominations, and show themselves to be true, consistant and unwavering whigs. At a late meeting of the Stockholders of the Dorchester and Milton Bank, held at their banking room, the following Directors were chosen—Darius Brewer, William Pierce, Roswell Gleason, H. Temple, Asaph Churchill, E. J. Baker and Thomas Liversidge. At a subsequent meeting of the Board, H. Temple was chosen President, and E. J. Bispham, Cashier.

It isn't right for ladies who keep company with young men who can earn hardly enough to clothe them, to expect as proof of their love, rings, bracelets, and all such worthless trinkets.

ORDINATION AT WEST CAMBRIDGE.

It is always a pleasant thing to witness the induction into the office of the ministry, of a young man, who having chosen this as the life dearest to his heart is about to enter upon his holy vocation. By a public and appropriate order of ceremonies the tie between himself and his sacred calling is formed, and with these solemn services he commences his work.

The ordination of Mr. James F. Brown of Quincy, late of the Cambridge Divinity School, over the Unitarian Society at West Cambridge, was such an occasion as we have referred to. And perhaps a short account of the proceedings may not be uninteresting to our readers. On Wednesday the 1st inst., at half past ten o'clock A. M., the council of ordination, as is usual, met, and after going through some very general business declared the candidate duly qualified, etc. They then adjourned to the church and the exercises commenced. After a Voluntary had been performed, and an anthem sung, an introductory prayer was made by Rev. Dr. Ingersoll of East Cambridge. The reading of appropriate passages of the Scriptures was then gone through with by Rev. A. B. Mussey of Cambridge. An original hymn by Mrs. E. A. Whittemore, was next sung, and was followed by the sermon by Rev. Chandler Robbins of Boston, from the text Matt. vi. 6. The subject was prayer—and the sermon was filled with the beauty of thought and expression, and was evidently the outpouring of a fervent soul, of one who had tasted fully of those joys so beautifully described as the result of a true and constant communion with God. Dr. Walker of Cambridge, then made the ordaining prayer, and this solemn service was performed in a most impressive manner and with a most earnest feeling. Then followed a very touching Charge by Rev. Nathaniel Hall of Dorchester, which was followed by a right manly and open Right Hand of Fellowship by Rev. Frank P. Appleton of Danvers. An original Hymn by Mrs. Lucy T. Whittemore being sung, and an Address to the people given by Dr. Francis of Cambridge, Rev. F. T. Gray of Boston, made a concluding prayer, the choir joined by the congregation, sang the Doxology, and the services were closed with a Benediction from the Pastor.

The company however being unwilling to break up after this, they all flocked to the Spy Pond Hotel to partake of the bounties of the table, which the liberal generosity of the society had spread as a welcome to their friends, their pastor's friends, and the pastor himself. The hotel is some distance from the church, and the company found their way to it as best pleased them, either on foot or in vehicles. We think however that the most sensible of the company were a small party who went by water. Preferring this to the more expeditious way by land, they took possession of a large and commodious paddle wheel'd boat and crossed on that beautiful sheet of water, Spy Pond. With a delightful company, and a most perfect day, it is not to be wondered at that the sail was equally delightful; so at least the words and looks of all present expressed. To our mind this was one of the most agreeable of the day's performances, and our memory is very poor if we soon forget it. However, we arrived at last at the hotel, and after some pleasant sociability in the drawing rooms we soon found ourselves seated—a company of three hundred or thereabouts—at tables fairly groaning and tottering under the weight of all that the season could afford to please and tempt the appetite. A blessing being invoked by Rev. W. P. Lunt of Quincy, the company received the bountiful gifts in the spirit with which they were given, and full justice was done them. The better part of human nature always shines out on such an occasion, and at this time it shone out no less bright than is usual. Joy, mirth, laughing, joking, gayety, delight, merriment (but why exhaust the vocabulary?) all poured forth in a constant and full stream, till the hour when we separated. As for ourself, bidding a 'good bye' to most of our friends, we joined the company of the others, and after a long and enchanting moonlight walk, laid our weary head upon the waiting pillow. Thus passed off one of the pleasantest and most fully satisfactory ordinations that one is able to attend in a long while. The services were appropriate and acceptable. They were performed with a deep fervor and sincerity, which we trust has been imparted—a portion of it—to the new pastor, and they were not without their proper effect on all who heard. Judging from all we saw, the bright sun of promise and success is shining upon the opening path of the young shepherd of an immortal flock. Clouds and darkness will nevertheless, overshadow that path at time. But he must have faith. This shall only be for a season. The sun shines clear for a longer time in the long run than it is overclouded, and the human path in the same proportion is illuminated by its rays. Let him have faith in God—let him have faith in his people—let him have faith in his own earnest purposes and untiring energies, and though the way may be for a time dark, it shall in the end be cleared of obstructions, and in a calm peace and joy he shall lead his willing flock to the gates of immortality.

We give joy to the Parish that they have called into their midst, and placed at their head, as a spiritual guide an earnest and devoted men. And we pray that the bond which has now been cemented may never be broken till God in his own good time and in his own best way, may will a separation. And may the stroke which leaves the one a bereaved people carry the other to Heavenly Mansions. C.

THE PRESIDENCY. From the returns thus far received, to use the language of the Boston Post, 'it is highly probable' that Maj. Gen. Zachary Taylor of Louisiana, has been chosen President of the United States. We have no donbt of the truth of this assertion. New York and Pennsylvania have both voted for Gen. Taylor.

Returns from most of the towns in Massachusetts have been received, and the result is, Gen. Taylor has received of the votes 61,175—Gen. Cass, 34,948—and Van Buren 38,013.

The annexed table gives the votes of the several towns in this County.

FRENCH LANGUAGE. Mr. S. W Hoyt, who proposes to open a school in this town, on Monday evening ensuing, is highly recommended by the Principal of the Hollis Institute in South Braintree, who speaks of him 'in terms of the highest approbation.' 'It is with sincere pleasure and entire confidence that I recommend him to the public as a teacher in every respect worthy of patronage.'

The Principal of the High School at Nantucket, speaks of Mr. Hoyt 'as a perfect master of the French language, possessing in a high degree those rare qualities which render him pre-eminently successful as a teacher.'

TOWN MEETINGS. At a meeting of the inhabitants of this town, on Tuesday last, Thompson Baxter being Moderator, it was voted to purchase three hundred feet of leading hose for the Vulture Engine Company, and then the meeting was dissolved.

The result of the meeting in this town for Presidential Electors shows the annexed vote:—

Taylor Electors,	256
Cass Electors,	212
Van Buren Electors,	169

The Electors at large on the Free Soil ticket each received 170 votes.

NOMINATED. Mr. George Clapp has been nominated by the Free Soil party of this town as their candidate for Representative to General Court.

SUPPOSED INCENDIARY. We learn that a young man by the name of White of Braintree has been arrested and committed to jail as the supposed incendiary in the destruction by fire of Mr. Thompson's property, a few weeks ago in that town. The examination was held, as understood by us, before Gen. Kingsbury of Weymouth, and he deemed the evidence sufficient for farther examination at a higher court. This is a notice of regret to us, and we trust that a parent's hope may not yet be blighted by so sad an occurrence.

FREE SOIL ADDRESS. On Saturday night last, Mr. George White of this town, addressed a full meeting at the Town Hall, on the principles of Free Soil. This effort was probably his first attempt before a promiscuous assembly, and we are glad to state that it was most successful and resulted greatly to the credit of the speaker for eloquence and oratory. Young in years and without experience, yet the dawn of his life in public gives promise of a reality that the future will be crowned with laurels which others would seek but cannot obtain. Success attend our young friend through life's devious way.

FIRE. On Tuesday night last, the dwelling-house of Mr. John D. Thayer, in the western part of this town, was discovered to be on fire, and the inmates had barely time to escape after the alarm was given. The furniture was principally saved, but the house was mostly destroyed. We learn that there was an insurance of five hundred dollars at the State Mutual Office in Boston. It is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

QUINCY CHARITABLE SOCIETY. At the annual meeting of this society, held on the evening of the 6th inst., at the house of Josiah Brigham, Esq., the following persons were chosen officers for the year ensuing:

President—Rev. William Allen.
Vice President—Lysander Richards
Secretary—Miss Sarah A. Bent.
Treasurer—Miss Judith Spear.
Directors—Charles A. Cummings, Lloyd G. Horton, Mrs. Benjamin Curtis, Miss Ann Bass, Mrs. Elijah Baxter, Mrs. Charles A. Cummings, Mrs. Eleazer Frederick, Mrs. John Faxon, and Miss Ann Curtis.

During the last year, the sum of one hundred dollars and eighty seven cents has been appropriated by the Directors for the benefit of fifteen families. The members of the Society will be waited upon in the course of a few weeks by some one of the Directors for the purpose of receiving their annual subscriptions.

NOTICES.

Free Soil Meeting.

Hon. Charles F. Adams will address the citizens of Quincy THIS EVENING, Nov. 11th, in the Town Hall, at seven o'clock.

Ladies, and the public generally, are invited to attend. Come one! come all!! Rally for Phillips & Mills! Per order of Free Soil Club.

Whig Meeting!

The Whigs of Quincy are requested to meet at the Lyceum Room, THIS (Saturday) EVENING, at 7 o'clock, for the purpose of nominating a candidate to be voted for on Monday next for Representative to the next General Court, and also to make such arrangements as may be deemed necessary for the approaching election.

Per order of the Town Whig Committee.
I. W. MUNROE, Chairman.

A meeting of the Democrats of Quincy will be held at the Lyceum Room, TO-MORROW EVENING, Nov. 11th, at 7 o'clock, to select a candidate to be supported for Representative on Monday next.

Per order of the Town Committee.

A gentleman from Vermont writes as follows:

Cambridge, Vermont, June 18, 1846.

Mr. Seth W Fowle,

Dear Sir—For several years past, my usually good health has been occasionally interrupted by spells of coughing produced by colds; a year ago last winter I was brought to the verge of the grave by a very severe cough, accompanied with severe pains in both sides, between the shoulders, etc, which, with long continued night sweats, and other alarming symptoms, reduced me so low that my friends despaired of my recovery. I consulted physicians, and tried the various remedies of the day, but none of them cured me. At last I procured Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, and it saved my life; I have not enjoyed better health for many years, therefore I can recommend others who need it to try it.

BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA AND TOMATO BITTERS. The extensive sale of these popular Bitters is the best evidence of their excellence. No other medicine approved by the Faculty has had such successful a run within so short a period. They are entirely composed of vegetables, and are the most innocent and efficacious of any corrective yet offered to the afflicted. In our opinion these Bitters are one of the best compounds yet offered for the cure of dyspepsia, and the long train of nervous diseases. For sale by Frederick Brown, corner of State and Washington Street.

The above is only printed as a proof of the high estimation in which BROWN'S Bitters are held by every one that has seen or experienced their wonderful virtues.

There is one thing that should always be thought of; that is, be sure and get the genuine. Always ask for BROWN'S, as that is the only original article of Sarsaparilla and Tomato.

For sale in Quincy by Mrs. E. HAYDEN and CHARLES CLAPP; Braintree, Oliver Perkins; South Braintree, J. Stoddard & Co. Sold also by agents generally. 2w Nov. 11.

The subscribers will meet at their room in the Town Hall, on the LAST SATURDAY in each month, from two till five o'clock, in the afternoon. Persons having business with the town are requested to transact it on said days.

OBITUARY.

Died in this town, 27th ult., Elizabeth N., daughter of Mr. Joseph and Mrs. Mary G. Crane, aged 4 years and 9 months.

When the shadows of death from thy spirit have roll'd
And glories celestial all radiant unfold,
How sweet to be welcomed to heavenly joys
By a voice and a smile so beloved as hers
Disappointments and sorrows, privation and death,
Are germs of the flowers in eternity's wreath,
Then mourn not the bud which is torn from thy view,
In beauty unfading its bloom shall renew,
And O, think had she still to thy care have been given
Thy heart's fondest wish had but trained her for Heaven.

Died in this town, Oct. 13th, Mr. John Newcomb, aged 44 years.

Nov. 1st, Miss Mary Ann Newcomb, daughter of the above, aged 20 years.

Thus the home circle is broken! A happy and united family have met with a sad bereavement, for the loved ones have been taken.

In the death of Mr. Newcomb, his family have sustained an irreparable loss. He was to them a kind husband and father, the friend whom they were accustomed to regard with affection and respect. He was an active and useful member of the Parish of Christ Church in this town, and was ever ready to lend his exertions to advance its prosperity. In the cause of humanity and benevolence he was always interested.

While we remember the father, let us not forbear a tribute to the daughter. Miss Newcomb possessed many amiable traits of character. It was in her home, amid the quiet scenes of domestic life, that her excellence was known and felt. The responsibilities of an eldest daughter devolved on her. These she met and discharged with zeal and fidelity. It was her constant wish to lighten her mother's cares, and to share with her in the performance of every duty. For many years she was an exemplary member of the Sunday School of Christ Church, and may we not trust that the blessed truths there learned, have been treasured in her heart, and have had their influence in preparing her for her last great change? In the bright morning of life, she has been called away from the present scenes of time to the untried realities of Eternity. Thus "Friend after friend departs,

Who hath not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
Which hath not here an end."

Lines, written on the death of Miss Mary A. Newcomb.

This lovely flower has passed away,
Her spirit 's left its mould of clay;
She calmly yielded up her breath
Unto the chill destroyer, Death.

The casket lies beneath the sod,
The gem it held has gone to God;
Death's messenger by him was sent
To carry back the treasure lent.

When e'er God calls we must resign
The blessings lent us for a time,
Although it cares an aching heart
When with our friends we're call'd to part.

'Twas but a few short weeks before
Since death that threshold had been o'er,
And call'd the father from his home
To slumber in the silent tomb.

Afflicted friends, great is thy loss,
But God thy path hath wisely cross'd;
He only took what was his own,
Then should we say—thy will be done.

Messenger's Notice.

NORFOLK ss. Roxbury, November 4th, 1848.

FRANCIS HILLIARD, Esq., Commissioner of Insolvency in and for the County of Norfolk, has issued a Warrant against the Estate of

JOHN P. ROWE,

Encourage your Own.

To the People of Quincy—

THE following is a well known motto, and strictly true:

"That County or Town that gives the most liberal encouragement to its own manufactures of every kind is well known to thrive, and increase in wealth and population."

There are a few interesting facts, of which we wish to remind you, and which we are inclined to think have slipped from the memory of some, and which it will be for your advantage as well as ours to remember.

1st. That at the QUINCY BOOKSTORE you will find all the

in use in this and the neighboring towns.

2d. That at the same place you will find every kind of

Blank Account Book,

RECORD or MEMORANDUM BOOK.

3d. That there you will find a great assortment of

Miscellaneous, Juvenile and Toy Books.

4th. That there you will find all kinds of

STATIONERY.

5th. That there you will find an innumerable variety of

FANCY GOODS.

6th That all the above will be sold at the very

Lowest Market Prices.

7th. That we are entirely disinterested when we say that you will be much better satisfied with yourselves and your bargains if you trade at home, in preference to "out of town."

8th. That there you will find a GOOD LIBRARY where you can procure reading on reasonable terms.

9th. That the Proprietors are agents for all the popular MAGAZINES, receiving the subscriptions themselves and furnishing the numbers on their own responsibility, free of any expense. Many have forgotten this of late, preferring to subscribe of some travelling agent, to one in their own town.

10th. That they RE BIND old Books, Pamphlets, Periodicals, Music, etc, "as cheap as they can afford to and as quick as anybody."

These things we wish to call to your memory, because while we have been moving on in a quiet kind of a way, you seem partly to have forgotten the old place, thinking perhaps that we did not keep up with the times in the variety of our goods and also in prices. Our rule, like that of many others, is, "quick sales and small profits," therefore call in and we will supply you most satisfactorily.

There's no mistake about it.

What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.

A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.

Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it:
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.

RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

MEMORY.

Where e'er we are cast on the ocean of life,
The scenes of our childhood we never forget,
Our early companions, in pleasure or strife,
Are fix'd in our mem'ries and nestle there yet.

The dead and the absent tho' oceans divide,
The unseen of years are impressed on our brain,
The objects we cherished return to our side
And we live with our lov'd ones the past o'er again.

Before me stands one to my early days known,
To others he bears the impress of old time,
His features to me as tho' chisel'd in stone,
Preserv'd in my mem'ry still bloom in their prime.

I see the young boy with his bat and his ball,
'Huzza for a frolic,' he halloos in glee;
He answers my whistle and comes at the call,
I see him the same as he once was to me.

We meet now but seldom, for fortune has placed
A distance between us not often pass'd o'er,
Yet oft that wild youth in my mem'ry embrac'd
Is present, and makes the blood tingle once more.

His brow may be wrinkled, his hair may be gray,
Yet mem'ry will paint with the pencil of truth
The boy as he was when I met him at play,
The self-same light-hearted, wild, frolicsome youth.

And her, the young nymph who my fancy first won,
Tho' long since departed I think on her yet,
And shall, 'till my race in this world shall be run,
Nor time cannot make me her image forget.

I see her as oft I have seen her before,
The dear little romp as she frolicked along,
And grieve that in fact I can see her no more
Or listen again to her wild carroll'd song.

Oh mem'ry! how precious a blessing thou art
'Midst trials and sorrow—and never in vain,
I seek from thy treasures a balm for the heart
And bring the departed to bless me again.

F. M. Adlington, Weymouth.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

From the maple in the meadow,
B[illegible]rill,
And the [illegible]aty oak and chestnut
On the hill,
Come the fading leaves of autumn,
Floating still;
Through the wide extending forest,
When the winds no longer rave,
They are dropping, dropping, dropping,
O'er the land and o'er the wave;
From the green boughs, where the summer
Tresses hung,
And the young twige, where the robin
Perched and sung,
Floating down into the grave.

And when I see them floating
Without sound,
From the long and pendant branches
All around;
When I see them torn and scattered
On the ground,
Bitter thoughts arise within me,
And my heart unconscious grieves;
And of sad and mournful numbers
Is the song that memory weaves,
For the heart that thrilled enraptured
To my own,
And the voice that answerod sweetly
Every tone,
Now are silent as the leaves.

Gleason's 'Flag.'

BEAUTY IS TRANSIENT.

As the morning sun beam, shining
O'er the dew besprinkled flower,—
To depart and leave it pining
In the tempest's chilling hour—

So is Beauty?—It must vanish
As the day-light in the west;
For storms of Time will rudely banish
Every token it possessed.

Let us trust in things that ever
With undimming lustre shine:
Joys that Time nor Death can never—
Fadeless pleasures, half divine!

New York Sun.

ANECDOTES.

A newly imported Irish girl was engaged in service in New York, recently, and on the third day of her servitude she came to her mistress before breakfast and inquired 'how the meals pleased the lady?' 'Why do you ask, Biddy?' 'Because, mam, the brixfist will be better to-day.' 'How so?' 'I thought the coffee and tay was too wake, myself, for your ladyship, as I jist mixed 'em together, to make 'em stronger, me lady.' Her mistress went into hysterics.

A certain English Lord gave a gala to the members of a volunteer corps. Among others, his lordship's tailor was present, and the host came up to him, saying, 'My dear sir, how d'ye do?—I beg pardon; I forget your name, but I perfectly recollect seeing you somewhere before.' The tailor was a little confounded by this particular notice, and as the best way of making himself remembered, whispered, 'I made your breeches.' The noble lord thinking the tailor had informed him of his name, turned round and took him by the hand, exclaiming—'Major Bridges, I am happy to see you!'

A fellow came running and panting out of breath, after the canal packet, when under weigh. 'Halloa, there! I want to get aboard.' 'Well! why don't you get one off the fence!' was the cool, but not very polite reply of the captain, as he ordered the driver to go ahead.

'Thomas,' said a sponging friend of a family, to the footman, 'Thomas, it's getting late, isn't it? How soon will the dinner come up, Thomas?' 'The very moment you are gone, sir,' was the unequivocal reply.

Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of

Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all

Diseases of the Blood,

such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated

Dandelion Panacea,

an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibilious remedy on record.

Oleum Jecoris Aselli,

Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,

For Coughs, Bronchetis, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.

The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

NORFOLK COUNTY

Health Insurance Company.

Capital $50,000.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A. S. DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled.

MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—from the age of fifteen to forty five years:

Paying	$3	a year, draw	$2	weekly.

The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES.

Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc, etc. yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.

The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.

THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.

The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.

The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, Weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.

The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

THERMOMETER CHURN.

THIS Churn is now taking the place of all others. The double bottom and the thermometer enables the operator to bring the cream immediately to the temperature, 62 degrees, which is necessary to the speedy separation of the butter from the butter-milk, and to the production of the largest amount of butter. No man with two cows can long be without one.

THE existence of the innumerable diseases which afflict the human race, appear to be WHOLLY CONCENTRATED, in regard to Malignity, Pain and Distress, to comparatively few in number. For instance, CONSUMPTION and SCROFULA, are either of them particularly horryfying to the feelings of even a careless observer; and to the patient themselves, they are the very realization of a DEATH STRUGGLE.

No Human Science has heretofore been enabled to extirpate these fearful complaints, and it was only by rhturning to the Simple Resources of the Natural Kingdom, that success has been afforded. BRANT'S INDIAN REMEDIES never have failed to help and cure the sufferer, as is

What say to that, eh! Tom?'

'No pulling hair, I hope.'

'Do you think I had better go to the barber, Tom, by way of a preventive?'

'Time enough. You told of an apprenticeship.'

'Oh, aye; that's the bitter pill, the drop too much, the great sacrifice that's to make a martyr of me, Tom. It seems they have got an academy of learning up there. When I am president, I'll have all such ruinous institutions levelled. James Fletcher, A. B., your servant, sir, was graduated at old Harvard, and he proposes assuming the duties and responsibilities of principal of that most excellent institution; the academy at Alder Brook, I mean.'

'Capital, Jem. But no! Why not dash out, play high, and take the fortress by glitter? No danger of an indictment for swindling.'

'There's a papa in the way, with an eye like a hawk. No; sober and intellectual is my cue; not moneyed, but evidently 'a rising young man.' Dang it! wont I rise?'

'If you can. But see, the steamer is ready for putting off. Success to ye, Jem; good by.'

'Good by. Better try my prescription. Think on 't do.'

Oh! what a sensation there was in our village, when it was reported that James Fletcher, Esq., of New York city, a young gentleman of very brilliant parts and highly finished education, was coming to take charge of our academy! There was much sympathy for him too. For it was rumored that the exigencies of the times had deprived him of a very fine fortune; and, moreover, that he came to us for the sake of giving his mind the opportunity to recover its usual tone and vigor, after having been nearly shattered by adversity. Mr. Fletcher arrived late of a Saturday evening; but in the ten minutes that elapsed before he disappeared, in one of the upper chambers of the 'Sheaf and Sickle,' he had been seen by half the men of the village. The next morning there was a great rush to the church; which must have been anticipated by the parson, for the elder part of the congregation did not fail to observe that he had taken unwonted pains with his discourse. Adaline Palmer called at our door, (Ada and I were close friends, and never went anywhere before that visit of yours, Bel) and, as we walked to church together, I had a full description of Mr. Fletcher—eyes, hair, complexion, bearing, character, and even feelings. The picture was rather 'taking,' I must say, but my muslin and straw was as good as new, then; so I only re-adjusted the precious morsel of paste glittering in my breast rush, and carried my parasol as daintily as possible. But it was of no use. Ada Palmer was the belle of Alder Brook; and, though it is impossible, in any case, to resist the desire to look one's prettiest, the vainest of us never dreamed of being seen when beside her. Worse still, I was informed that Mr. Fletcher was particularly anxious to board at Deacon Palmer's, for the reason that his love of retirement and quiet might be better gratified there than at any other house in the village.

'And will he?' I inquired with quite enough interest.

'If we can get papa to consent.'

'To think of your having a boarder!'

'You pity us, I dare say, Fan,' whispered Ada, with a very roguish twinkle of the eye, and knowing look about the corners of the mouth that was particularly provoking.

'Rather impertinent, Miss Deacon's daughter,' thought I; 'I shall treasure that up to measure back to you one of these days'; but there was no chance to reply, for we had entered the church porch; and so with a mutual smile and a nod of good natured defiance, we parted. I soon discovered Mr. Fletcher, for his was the only strange face there; and he evidently soon discovered Ada Palmer. Oh! Ada was a little queen; and she never looked so beautiful as on that day. It was impossible not to concede to her winning; and when, in a fortnight after, Mr. Fletcher was reckoned among them, I do not believe there was a belle in the whole village but thought it was her due, and yielded the conquest to her with a good grace. But we did have rare times, making Ada blush, and (did you never observe that awkward right angle which bashful consciousness puts in the corner where the two lips meet?) make square mouths. Rare times had we; and it was as good revenge as need be.

But poor Jem Fletcher! he was right when he anticipated a severe apprenticeship; for the deacon was a marvel of a good man. Deacon Palmer's right hand, holding his purse within it, was given to every good enterprise, whether for the advancement of religion or morality, or intended to promote the secondary interest of the village which acknowledged him its head. So poor Jem was not only obliged to attend church three times every Sabbath, and lectures of various kinds during the week, but he must needs listen, with at least pretended interest, to a thousand plans for ameliorating the condition of the human race; for which weighty matters, he hoped as he listened, at some future day to relieve his intended father-in-law, by taking the helm into his own hands. The more Jem saw of the old gentleman's generosity, the more sanguine became his hopes; and bright was the picture his fancy painted, of the time when good Deacon Palmer would no longer be obliged to look after wealth which he did not know how to use. But Jem's hardest apprenticeship was not to labor, it was Rachel herself. Oh! such a sprite as was Ada Palmer! Proud as Juno, and mischievous as a whole troop of those small people they call fairies, headed by bright Titania's own jester. An was she, with the same 'crimson threaded lips, and the 'silver treble laughter' on them; but as dignified as a lady duchess when she chose. Oh! there was no bringing Ada to terms till she was ready to come, and sometimes I used to doubt whether Jem Fletcher, though he trained his eyes and trained his tongue, and tuned his voice to the tone of a harp with a die-away air on its strings, would be able to accomplish it. Ada was unreadable even by us. Jem, however, hoped on, and with good reason, for it was evident that he had the right ear of both parents.

" Airy, fairy Lillian.
Flitting fairy Lillian,"

There was to be a meeting of the 'Alder Brook Young Ladies' Temperance Society,' and Mr. Fletcher was unanimously chosen 'the very one,' to deliver a fitting lecture on the occasion. Jem Fletcher lecture on temperance! But no matter, he had embarked, and must push forward at all hazards. Besides, what better opportunity could a lover wish for the display of his elquence? What delicate compliments might he pay to one under cover of the whole! How charmingly would he angelize all the fair teens at Alder Brook, while Ada would be thinking within herself, 'if he holds all of us in such high estimation, what would his idolatry be when concentrated?' Mr. Fletcher delighted the ladies by consenting to address them; but, in the meantime, he begged a week's delay, as he would not presume to rise before such an assembly of wit and beauty, and talent, without due preparation. The delay was granted, and poor Jem Fletcher sat down determinedly and perseveringly to his severe task. Such havoc as was made among the goose-quills and foolscap! Jem's organ of destructiveness had never accomplished so much since the days of his babyhood, when newspapers had been given him as playthings. But he succeeded. Even his own fastidious taste was fully satisfied. And what might not be expected of those bright beings on the look-out for beauties? Jem was in raptures. He read and re-read his address; and each time it grew more strikingly brilliant, more witty, mere sweetly sentimental, more gracefully insinuating—in short, more decidedly the precise thing to bait the hook dropped through a lady's ear into her breast. We all expected wonders of Mr. Fletcher, and curiosity, pushed back like a boisterous beggar, till the latest moment, was ready for a rush.

'Ada, go up to Mr. Fletcher's room, and get the newspaper,' said the deacon, after the young lady had donned bonnet and shawl to go to the lecture.

Ada seized my hand. 'Come with me Pan; Mr. Fletcher is down taking tea with mamma. He stayed out late to night—conning his speech I dare say,' she added in a whisper.

The deacon rang for lights, and away went Ada and I for the newspaper. Mr. Fletcher's hat, with his gloves beside it, was upon the table; and upon a folded handkerchief, like the driven snow in whiteness, lay a little manuscript book.

'Look, the lecture, Fanny,' said Ada, taking one corner between the tops of her fingers, and elevating it above her head, 'Now what would you give to see the inside of it?'

'Better to hear it, Ada; I never could bear to read a manuscript. But what a very nice man this Mr. Fletcher of yours must be. See how carefully that bit of blue riband is knotted.'

'The very same that he stole from my workbasket this morning! Saucy, isn't it? I have half a mind to punish that impudence. Besides, (between our two selves, Fan,) this very correct Mr. Fletcher is an arrant hypocrite—I see it in his eyes and hear it in his voice. He would be far more at home, I dare say, singing—

" Blame not the bowl—the fruitful bowl," than saying pretty things to the edification of us cold water-ites. Let's punish his knavery. Here come to the window while I untie this knot.'

Ada Palmer's fingers shook as though shocked at their own naughty doing while she loosened the blue riband, and then slipped the inner sheet from it, and slid it down behind the sofa.

'Now, if I only had some queer thing to substitute. Look, there's a sheet of note paper on the table! He has just written down a page, and the ink is hardly dry on it. Bring it Fanny—it is just the size of this—some love note, I dare say; and we shall get a blush from him at any rate when he opens it. To think of making him blush in public! but we must be very demure—it would not do for us to smile even, or we should be detected.'

By the time Ada had finished her caution, the sheet of note paper was fastened snugly in the middle and the book returned to its resting place on the handkerchief.

A more mellow, rich toned voice than Jem Fletcher's I never heard; and on that evening it was modulated to its utmost capacity for melody. I had entirely forgotten Ada's mischievous prank, and so had turned over three leaves. The sentiments, too, and the happy mode of adorning them. Oh! Jem Fletcher had success for his industry, if not for his honesty! Suddenly, while Fletcher's tongue was thrilling beneath a whole tide of eloquence, and hearts were beating and eyes flashing before him, he made an abrupt pause. Placing his right hand upon the page he raised the other to his eyes hastily, as though brushing away some intruding vision—but no! it was there yet. Jem tried his handkerchief but it did no good. Something had evidently planted itself before him that he did not wish to see. He turned over leaf after leaf confusedly, and back again; while the red blood seemed ready to burst from his forehead; and we could almost fancy that we saw his hair raising itself in consternation above.

'I did not mean to embarrass him so much,' whispered Ada in my ears.

At that moment Fletcher's eye fell upon us, and such an eye! Mortification, distress, anger—every thing painful was there; and no doubt our blazing faces, with the attempt at a smile which we both of us indistinctively made betrayed the whole. Fletcher gave but one glance at us, one at the curious audience, now in a buzz of wonder; and snatching his hat from the seat behind him, he bounded for the door. The congregation was astounded, and poor Ada and myself trembled like two leaves in a storm. Slowly and one by one, the people went out; and that night, a light was kept burning in every house for fear of the mad tutor.

'Do you know what was the matter with Mr. Fletcher last evening?' inquired deacon Palmer of his daughter, while at the breakfast table. Ada's face took on the hue of a full blown peony. Then you have seen this before?' and the deacon pulled from his pocket the little book tied with the blue riband.

'I am sorry, papa; indeed, I am very sorry. I did not intend to mortify Mr. Fleteher so much—I only slipped in that paper for a frolic'; and Ada actually burst into tears.

'Then you have not read it!'

'Oh, no, papa! you could not think I would be so mean?'

'Well, Mr. Fletcher thought you had. I found this by the church door, where he dropped it. If you do not know what paper you slipped in for a frolic, you may read it now.'

Ada's eyes grew larger and larger as she perused the precious document which had turned Jem Fletcher into a madman; and such a volume of laughter as she closed it with, had never before burst even from her merry heart.

No wonder that poor Jem was mortified past redemption; for the note which he supposed Ada had perused, gave a full account of his plans and prospects to his friend Tom; and closed with a characteristic eulogium on pretty damsels in general, and monied pretty ones in particular.

Jem Fletcher has never been heard of since at Alder-brook; and many a good lady to this day, often expresses the hope, that the dear young man has found a shelter in some lunatic asylum.

SPUNK.

This is getting to be a very popular word,—quite as much so as that good old English word 'Bamboozle,' which Senator Benton sanctioned last season. The necessity which some people feel of "showing their spunk," when trifling annoyances cross them, is productive of a vast amount of heart-burning, bickering, and spleen.

Many a quarrel has arisen in early life, and cast its shade of bitterness and hatred, even over the graves of one of the parties, which had its origin in an innocent mistake on one part and a determination to 'show spunk' on the other.

'I will let you know I've got some spunk!' said a dunned landlord to his creditor, one day, on acknowledging the receipt of a dun. How did he do it? He cursed, raved, swore, and blackguarded, paid his bill, and then, to spite his impatient creditor, went to another house to buy his liquor, and paid more money for poorer goods. This was 'showing spunk' the proper or popular way.

Merchants sometimes get severely tried by the thoughtlessness or heartlessness of customers; some of them sacrifice their personal interest, their dignity of character, their temper, and peace of mind for the next twenty four hours, merely to 'show their spunk.' Because their customers are reckless, undecided or heartless, they will degrade themselves to a still lower level by displaying spleen and fretful reproach.

Farmers often go to law on disputed landmarks, merely to 'show their spunk,' and though neither may be quite right, and though the dispute may be settled by a disinterested party for fifty cents, and though the amount in dispute be not over five dollars, they will sometimes spend five hundred dollars each in law, and neither get any thing but beggary for the trouble. This last is not a very rare case.

Many an individual wishing to show to the world that they 'are not to be trod upon,' will only show that they are unfit even to tread upon, owing to their having so mean a spirit of 'spunk.'

So we have seen married people pass years in continual recrimination and antagonism, merely because both are 'spunky' and neither would yield a jot. Their home was a perfect hell, and their children grew up in strife. Flirtation and impudence on her part, and vice and profligacy on his part succeeded the rational happiness of conjugal life, and the very prime of life was changed to a long and tedious interval of discordant existence,—and all this because each wanted to show their 'spunk.'

Spunky people may depend upon it that the only proper way to show their spunk is to war with incessant activity against all bitterness, hatred, peevishness, littleness, indecorum, discourteous language, and undignified demeanor in every possible shape; and by so doing they will find that gentle words will come cheaper, and pay better than any other, and that true peace of mind, worth more than all else, is the necessary consequence of being 'real gentlemen and ladies.'—Boston Investigator.

Resolution is the talisman that forces the floodgate of wealth, and unravels the mystery of getting rich.

THE FIVE CRADLES. A man who had recently become a votary to Bacchus, returned home one night in an intermediate state of booziness. That is to say, he was comfortably drunk, but perfectly conscious of his unfortunate situation. Knowing that his wife was asleep, he decided to attempt gaining his bed without disturbing her, and by sleeping off his inebriation, conceal the fact from her altogether. He reached the door of his room without creating much disturbance, and after ruminating a few moments upon the matter, he thought if he could reach the bedpost, and hold on to it while he slipped off his apparel, the remainder of the feat would be easily accomplished. Unfortunately for his scheme, a cradle stood in a direct line with the bedpost, about the middle of the floor. Of course, when his shins came in contact with the aforesaid piece of furniture, he pitched over it with a perfect looseness; and upon gaining an erect position, ere an equilibrium was established, he went over it backwards, in an equally summary manner. Again he struggled to his feet and went head formost over the bower of infant happiness. At length, with the fifth fall, his patience became exhausted, and the obstacle was yet to be overcome. In desperation he cried out to his sleeping partner—'Wife! wife! how many cradles have you got in the house? I've fallen over five, and here's another before me!'

HUMAN LIFE ESTIMAEED BY PULSATION. An ingenious author asserts that the length of a man's life may be estimated by the number of pulsations he has strength to perform. Thus, allowing seventy years for the common age of man, and sixty pulses in a minute for the common measure of pulses in a temperate person, the number of pulsations in his whole life would amount to 2,207,520,000; but if by intemperance, he forces his blood into a more rapid motion, so as to give seventy five pulses in a minute, the number of pulses would be completed in fifty years, consequeatly his life would be reduced fourteen years.

THE SELF-LAMPLIGHTER. What wont ingenuity accomplish? Here we have an invention by which lamps or candles may be lighted at any moment of time by a clock or a pull of a cord. If attached to an alarm-clock, a light may be produced at any hour. In cases where people wish to rise at a certain unusual time of night, all that is to be done is to set the clock and make the connection of the Lamplighter "all right," and then, when the hour comes round, you have a lamp already lighted at the same time. Certainly very convenient. When not desired to be connected with a clock it can be attached to a cord, terminating in some piace near the bed, like a bell-pull, so that it is only necessary to pull the cord to produce a light previous to rising. It is designed also to be attached to the bell-handle of a front door, that pulling the bell instantly makes a light to see by in the hall, or any other part of the house. The inventor is Mr. Alexander Bennett of New York.

THE ELEMENTS OF HAPPINESS ARE WITHIN. The reason why so few men are really happy is—they look abroad for pleasure; while the elements of true happiness slumber in their own bosoms. It does not depend upon the condition of this man or the other—upon the course of one party or the other—whether you shall really enjoy yourself; but it does depend upon whether you look into your heart and draw out its love and affection. If you love some being tenderly, you will be happy. If you strive earnestly to promote the welfare of another, you will be happy. If you visit the sick to comfort them, you will be happy. If you do all the good you can, you will be happy. The seat of true happiness, then, is in your own bosom—and when you live in a measure as you ought, you will never look about for true pleasure.

'SO IS A HEN.' An eccentric character about town habitually uses this phrase when ever he hears or reads any thing that bears too hard upon his credulity. The other day, while reading the news of the day, he suddenly threw down the paper and exclaimed, with great stress and emphasis, "So is a Hen." A by-stander inquired of him what he meant by the expression. 'Why,' said he, 'that paper says that Turkey is making rapid strides towards civilization, and all I have to say is—so is a Hen.'

YANKEES. Jeffries, the great reviewer, remarked, that, were a premium of a thousand pounds offered for the best translation of the Greek Bible, the prize would be taken by some Yankee, who till that moment, had never seen a word of Greek in his life. He would immediately, he said, commence learning the language, to qualify himself for the great undertaking, and would finish the whole quicker than any other person, and bear off the premium.

GOOD TOOLS. In providing yourself with farming implements, always endeavor to obtain the best. It is bad policy to select a poor or imperfect instrument, simply because you can get it cheap. Your ten cent penknives and shilling razors are the dearest in the end, every one will admit, and the same remark applies with equal correctness, to cheap scythes, axes, shovels, spades, ploughs, hoes, etc, etc.

READ THIS. It is not a pleasant occurrence to us to ask our friends to pay a debt which has been due for years, as we have believed that a sense of duty certainly from the frequent notices which have already been given would have induced a prompt poyment, yet in very many instances, all notices of this kind have been disregarded, and if the process of law be the next step, certainly no fault can be found with us. Law in future must take its course. Not that we wish such a step, but necessity compes it. Money does every thing, and we are poor.

BROTHER JONATHAN FOR CHRISTMAS. Happy merry Christmas is near at hand! We know this fact from having received the customary Brother Jonathan. The immense picture sheet of Messrs. Wilson & Co.—the double mammoth Brother Jonathan—freighted with good things for a Christmas holiday, has been issued in New York. Price 12 cents per copy. It is a glorious sight to see so many fine large pictures on one immense sheet of paper. The country Sleigh Ride is the grand feature. That immense engraving fills two entire pages. Nearly one page is also occupied with the Cotter's Saturday Night, and the Universal Prayer, two spirited devotional pictures. We have besides a multitude of merry Christmas scenes illustrated to the life which we have no room to enumerate. Altogether this is the most splendid pictorial ever issued from the Brother Jonathan press.

Notices of the Press.

Notwithstanding the great space occupied by the two large pictures, there is nearly an acre of room left in this immense sheet, which abounds in fun, frolic and Christmas sayings and doings of every description. The aggregate number of engravings in the Christmas Jonathan is over one hundred.—Cour. & Enq.

There are also several classical engravings—rich scenes from the works of Goethe, Shaffer, and other celebrated scholars—which we have not room to describe in detail.—N. Y. Tribune.

We laughed until our sides ached over the droll adventures of Tom Brown of Shirt-tail Bend.—Police Gazette.

The large picture representing the Country Sleigh Ride is decidedly a master-piece of fun and Christmas frolic.—Evening Post.

Besides the Christmas jokes both in picture and print, there are some scenes of a graver character. The Cotter's Saturday Night, the Universal Prayer, and Consolation to the Dying, are engravings of rare beauty and spirit.—Home Journal.

Poor Mr. Snitch and his dog, and Tom Brown of Shirt-tail Bend, are among the Christmas tit bits presented in the Brother Jonathan, this year.—N. Y. Herald.

EDITORS LOOKING UP. James Brooks, Esq. of the New York Express, and Horace Greeley of the Tribune, have been elected to Congress—Mr. B. for the next Congress, and Mr. G. for the remainder of the present.

INAUGURATION DAY. The 4th of March next will fall on Sunday. This has occurred once before since the adoption of the present Constitution, viz, in the year 1821. It will not happen again until the year 1877. As to who will be President on Sunday, the 4th of March, says the National Intelligencer, we cannot say unless it be Capt. Goddard, Chief of the Auxiliary Guard, who is appointed by the President to protect the Government property.

The oath of office, however, can be administered to Gen. Taylor on Sunday, the inauguration ceremonies take place on Monday, and thus meet the difficulty.

TOWN MEETINGS.

At the annual election of State and County officers, held on Monday last, the following is the result of the balloting in this town :

For Governor.

Whole number of ballots,	544
George N. Briggs,	255
Stephen C Phillips,	250
Caleb Cushing,	34

Frederick Robinson 1, B. F. Hallett 4.

For Lieutenant Governor.

Whole number of ballots,	549
John Reed,	255
John Mills,	250
Henry W. Cushman,	44

For Senators.

Whole number of ballots,	550
David A. Simmons,	206
James C. Doane,	255
Lewis Harding,	255
Jesse Pierce,	210
Milton M. Fisher,	210
Edward L. Keyes,	209
Joel Hunt,	85
Isaac Tower,	85
Aaron Hobart,	84

Octavius T. Rogers 41, George Curtis 1, Henry A. Gay 1, Seth Crane 1, Luther Munn 1.

For Representative to Congress.

Whole number of ballots,	548
Horace Mann,	503
Bradford L. Wales,	45

For Representative to General Court.

Whole number of ballots,	547
Necessary for choice,	274
Israel W. Munroe,	232
George Clapp,	119
George Marsh,	142

Luther Munn 26, Charles F. Adams 18, George W. Marsh 1, Wyman Abercrombie 1, Micajah N. Adams 2, Jacob F. Eaton 3, George Newcomb 1, Thomas D. Pierce 1, G. Marsh 1.

Second Balloting for Representative.

Whole number of ballots,	560
Necessary to a choice,	281
George Marsh	293
Israel W. Munroe,	240

Scattering 27.

At a town meeting held on the same day, Mr. George Marsh presiding, it was voted to pay the Tiger Engine Company the sum of money paid for suction hose.

GROWTH OF NEW YORK. New York city is now second only to London and Paris, of all the cities of Europe. London has a population of two millions ; Paris, one million ; New York, over five hundred thousand.

"ROUGH AND READY." We would call the attention of our readers to the excellent Clothing Store of George Savil & Co. on Washington Street, where can be found the best assortment of ready-made clothing of all kinds and at the lowest prices. Give them a call.

NORFOLK COUNTY. As far as we have been able to ascertain, the following gentlemen have been elected to the House of Representatives from towns in this County .

Brookline—John Howe, whig.
Colasset - George Beals, whig
Dorchester—William Pierce, Edward H. R. Ruggles, whigs.
Milton—George W. Greene, free soil.
Needham—T. Kingsbury, free soil.
Quincy—George Marsh, free soil.
Roxbury—Joseph H. Billings, Daniel Jackson, John S. Sleeper, whigs.

STATE ELECTION. The returns of votes in the towns of the State, with the exception of about twenty, give Briggs 59,590. Cushing 24,063, Phillips 34,920. It is rather doubtful as to the choice of Gov. Briggs by the people. The Legislature will be strongly whig. Six members of Congress have been chosen, all whigs, leaving four vacancies, viz—Worcester, Bristol, Middlesex and Essex.

The Governor has called an extra session of the Legislature for the choice of Presidential Electors.

Nearly all women are aristocrats. Wealth, power, and high station, have charms in their eyes and in their hearts, more than really great qualities.

Dr. Batchelder, who was charged with an offensive crime, resulting in the death of a young lady in Lowell, has been discharged. The murder and sale of the body of the victim goes unpunished.

Gov. Slade, of Vermont, after having made a tour through the New England States, has returned to the West with twenty six Yankee girls,—ostensibly as teachers, but, in reality to be married, when suitable offers are made.

In Charlestown, (Mass.) petitions are circulating in favor of its annexation to Boston.

Mr. Thaddeus Stevens, member elect from Pennsylvania, is pledged, it is said, to introduce a bill on the first day of the meeting of the thirty-first Congress, to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia.

The United States steamer Massachusetts sailed last week from New York for Oregon with United States troops,—companies L and M of the 1st Artillery, numbering one hundred and sixty men.

An editor in Pennsylvania apprizes his delinquent subscribers that he has appointed the Sheriff his agent, and has authorized him to give receipts and close accounts.

There are only two States in the Union which require a majority to choose electors,—Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

The Legislature of North Carolina is now tied, the democratic candidate in the vacancy having been elected.

The late John Jacob Astor's personal property has been ascertained to amount to four millions of dollars. The value of his real estate has not been fixed.

Madame Josephine Weiss, the directress of the Viennoise children, has taken forty seven thousand dollars in Government stock. She first purchased treasury notes of the issue of 1847, to the amount of forty five thousand dollars, and then funded them in stock, together with the interest which had accrued—two thousand dollars.

Gen. Persifer F. Smith has been appointed Governor of California, in place of Gen Mason, recalled.

Holden's Dollar Magazine presents new attractions every month. The November number has a likeness of Orville Dewey, D. D., and several other engravings.

Ex-Gov. McNutt of Mississippi, died at Memphis (Tenn.) on the 23d ult. He was celebrated as the upholder of repudiation in that State.

A gentleman from Vermont writes as follows :
Cambridge, Vermont, June 18, 1846.
Mr. Seth W Fowle,
Dear Sir—For several years past, my usually good health has been occasionally interrupted by spells of coughing produced by colds ; a year ago last winter I was brought to the verge of the grave by a very severe cough, accompanied with severe pains in both sides, between the shoulders, etc. which, with long continued night sweats, and other alarming symptoms, reduced me so low that my friends despaired of my recovery. I consulted physicians, and tried the various remedies of the day, but none of them cured me. At last I procured Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, and it saved my life ; I have not enjoyed better health for many years, therefore I can recommend others who need it to try it.

BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA AND TOMATO BITTERS. The extensive sale of these popular Bitters is the best evidence of their excellence. No other medicine approved by the Faculty has had so successful a run within so short a period. They are entirely composed of vegetables, and are the most innocent and efficacious of any corrective yet offered to the afflicted In our opinion these Bitters are one of the best compounds yet offered for the cure of dyspepsia, and the long train of nervious diseases. For sale by Frederick Brown, corner of State and Washington Street.

The above is only printed as a proof of the high estimation in which BROWN'S Bitters are held by every one that has seen or experienced their wonderful virtues

There is one thing that should always be thought of ; that is, be sure and get the genuine. Always ask for BROWN'S, as that is the only original article of Sarsaparilla and Tomato.

A warning to the young and gay !
And to the tomb all still and cold
The mourners take their way.

The bearers set the coffin down
Within the sacred burial-place,
And through the open lid, the sun
Shines in upon that face.

And weeping eyes now look their last,
And friends repeat the fond adieu ;
The spirit unto God has passed,
And earth to earth is due.

Thanks to the truth of Holy Writ,

The Boston Almanac for 1849,

BY S. N. DICKINSON,

WILL be published about the 1st of December. It will be printed upon new type, and contain more pages than any previous number. Beautifully bound in cloth, and gilt. It will contain

A new and accurate MAP of the vicinity of Boston, embracing a distance of 15 or 20 miles around the city. Long Pond, and the whole line of the Aqueduct are delineated upon it. The outside towns on the Map, are Hull, Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth, Braintree, Canton, Dedham, Medford, Sherburne, Framingham, Sudbury, Concord, Acton, Carlisle, Billerica, Wilmington, Danvers, Beverly and Marblehead. All the Islands in the harbor are set down. The Watering Places—Phillips Beach, Nahant Bay and Beach, Nahant, Chelsea Beach, etc

An improved set of CALENDAR PAGES, calculated by Prof. Pierce, of Cambridge The calendar pages are accompanied by a short description of the appearance of the Heavens on the 15th of each month. Opposite to each calender page there is a blank leaf for memorandums, containing a blank line and date for every day in the month These MEMORANDA PAGES are of great convenience to an individual, or for the use of a family, in making memorandums from day to day

The BUSINESS DIRECTORY of the city of Boston, corrected and enlarged. This Directory exhibits all trades, business and professions under their appropriate heads ; that is, under the head Apothecaries, will be found the names of all persons engaged in that business ; under the head of Bakers, the names and places of all engaged in that business, and so on to the end of the alphabet. This document is one of great usefulness to the citizen, and of still greater importance to persons in the country, as here they have laid before them the key to the whole business population of the metropolis. It occupies about 80 closely printed pages of the Almanac.

An interesting historical account of the PUBLIC SCHOOLS of Boston This article has been prepared with great care and much research, by Isaac F. Shepard, Esq, Principal of the Otis School. It embraces the subject from that period of time when public schools were first thought of by our forefathers, and traces it up, in its growth, from that time to the present. It is deeply interesting, and occupies 36 pages of the Almanac. An ENGRAVED VIEW of each of the Public Schools is given, and two views of Model Primary Schools, which have been erected within the past year or two.

Some account of a WINTER PASSED IN FLORIDA, by an invalid, in hopes of being restored to health His experience given, which may be of great convenience to those intending to visit that region for a similar purpose Accompanying this article, the writer has prepared a set of WEATHER TABLES, showing the temperature in Jacksonville, Florida, and Boston, for one year To the curious in such matters, it is thought these tables will be very interesting.

A Table of the 772 Streets, Places and Alleys in the city of Boston, giving the beginning and terminus of each street, and the location of the places and alleys. With this table the stranger can find any street in the city

A list of 227 EXPRESSES that leave Boston daily, semi-weekly and weekly.

A list of the RAIL-ROADS diverging from Boston, and a list of the Branch Roads running from the Boston Roads

These are the principal features of the Boston Almanac for 1849. But it embraces a great variety of other matters, useful and entertaining to the reader.

This Almanac contains TWO HUNDRED and TWENTY closely printed pages. The quantity of matter is greater than that found in an ordinary 8vo. of 500 pages. The octavo volume would sell for two or three dollars. For the Almanac, the price is only TWENTY FIVE CENTS, per single copy. By wholesale, a very liberal discount is made.

Orders sent to Messrs. R B. MUSSEY & Co., 29 Cornhill, and to Mr. THOMAS GROOM, 82 State Street, Publishers, will meet with immediate attention. 3w Boston, Nov. 18.

Encourage your Own.

To the People of Quincy—

THE following is a well known motto, and strictly true :

"That County or Town that gives the most liberal encouragement to its own manufactures of every kind is well known to thrive, and increase in wealth and population"

There are a few interesting facts, of which we wish to remind you, and which we are inclined to think have slipped from the memory of some, and which it will be for your advantage as well as ours to remember.

1st. That at the QUINCY BOOKSTORE you will find all the

in use in this and the neighboring towns.

2d. That at the same place you will find every kind of

Blank Account Book,

RECORD or MEMORANDUM BOOK.

3d. That there you will find a great assortment of

Miscellaneous, Juvenile and Toy Books.

4th. That there you will find all kinds of

STATIONERY.

5th. That there you will find an innumerable variety of

FANCY GOODS.

6th. That all the above will be sold at the very

Lowest Market Prices.

7th. That we are entirely disinterested when we say that you will be much better satisfied with yourselves and your bargains if you trade at home, in preference to "out of town."

8th. That there you will find a GOOD LIBRARY where you can procure reading on reasonable terms.

9th. That the Proprietors are agents for all the popular MAGAZINES, receiving the subscriptions themselves and furnishing the numbers on their own responsibility, free of any expense. Many have forgotten this of late, preferring to subscribe of some travelling agent, to one in their own town.

10th That they RE-BIND old Books, Pamphlets, Periodicals, Music, etc, "as cheap as they can afford to and as quick as anybody."

These things we wish to call to your memory, because while we have been moving on in a quiet kind of a way, you seem partly to have forgotten the old place, thinking perhaps that we did not keep up with the times in the variety of our goods and also in prices. Our rule, like that of many others, is, "quick sales and small profits," therefore call in and we will supply you most satisfactorily.

The Globe:
A Congressional, Agricultural and Literary Newspaper.

THE Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur; and a Congressional Globe periodically, as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source that may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in scientific and practical works on agriculture. For material, the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects, will be consulted, and, it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Globe, as a newspaper, and as a vehicle of information and amusement in other respects, will be under the charge of Francis P. Blair and James C. Pickett. The Congressional department and business concerns of the paper will be under the management of John C. Rives. The public are familiar with Blair and Rives connected with the press. In introducing Mr. Pickett as one of the concern, they will be allowed to say a few words of him. He is a gentleman favorably known to the Government, for the talent and judgment which distinguished his diplomatic service while connected with the mission to Quito; and more recently when Charge d'Affaires to Peru. From his pen mainly the Globe will derive the selections and translations from the French journals and periodicals, the comments on them, and the other litetary articles, which will be found among its chief attractions.

The Globe will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the balance of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a Weekly Globe, a Congressional Globe, and an Appendix.

The Weekly Globe will be the vehicle of the miscellaneous articles of the daily print, with a synopsis of the Congressional proceedings.

The Congressional Globe will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States, and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and Appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue. The Editors of the Globe have borne their share in the party conflicts of the press. They claim an honorable discharge from the vocation. The Globe will inviolably maintain the neutrality which its relation to Congress imposes.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year, - - - - - - $5 00
For one copy of the Weekly Globe one year, 2 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of January, - - - - 1 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of Jan. 1 00
For six copies of either the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, or part of both, - 5 00

The subscription for the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, after the 1st of January, will be $1 50. The original price of one dollar does not pay the expense of the publications in consequence of the great increase of matter published.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore no person need consume time in ordering them, unless the subscription price accompanies the order

There's no mistake about it.

What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.

A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.

Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it:
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.

RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

WRITTEN ON A VISIT TO THE GRAVE OF A FRIEND.

Beneath the deep shade of an old weeping willow
I've sat at the close of the day,
And beheld from the grave-stones which prop'd each green pillow
The shadows fast fleeting away ;
Then with sorrow I thought of the young and the fair,
Whose life like those shadows had fled,
Who like me in the warm glow of youth had been there,—
Now there to be laid with the dead !

But sader the thoughts which awoke in my mind,
As I traced on a new sculptured stone
The name of the lost one, whose memory 's combin'd
In existence with that of my own.
Like a flower which but bloom'd for untimely decay,
Ere nip'd by the autumn's first frost,
She pass'd in the spring-time of beauty away,
And all save her memory is lost !

That sweet smile is now lost in the dark silent tomb,
That fair form now wastes 'neath the sod,
But she lives in a world of unchanging bloom,
For I know that her spirit 's with God,
Then why should I mourn ; for a few more short years
And my dust to the earth shall be given,
Then far from the cares of this dark vale of tears,
I may see that fair angel in Heaven !

Boston, Mass. WILLIAM HARRIS.

For the Quincy Patriot.

NEW ENGLAND.

How bless'd is the land which the old pilgrims planted,
The land where the church and the school house are seen,
Where early in childhood the praise we oft chaunted
Of him who the friend of our fathers has been.

The God of New England has bless'd every valley,
And caus'd every hill top to echo his name ;
From that christian fortress his advocates sally
And win by their conquests both glory and fame.

Our rocky New England ! thy free gushing waters
To healthy industry the signal unfurl'd !
With cloth of fine texture are mantled thy daughters,
Thy sons for their enterprise known through the world.

Air, fire and water, and lightning obey thee,
Young leader of nations to freedom and truth :
Accurs'd be the wretch who to vice would betray thee
Or blight the fair propects that dawn on thy youth.

Oh long be thy sons for their virtue exalted,
Still favor'd by him who hath care for their souls ;
And may that free spirit that never has halted,
Be wafted o'er earth 'till it circles the poles.

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

WHILE THE BELL IS RINGING.

With lungs of fire and ribs of steel ;
With sighing valve and groaning wheel ;
With startling scream end giant stroke ;
With showers of sparks and clouds of smoke ;
The iron steed the train is bringing ;
So look out while the bell is ringing.

The gazing, gaping crowd stand back !
Will ye be crushed, or clear the track ?
Now all aboard and off again !
The drones behind can't reach the train,
They stumble where the switch was swinging ;
So look out while the bell is ringing.

Just so the engine of Reform
Rolls on, through sunshine and through storm ;
O'er kings and sceptres, crowns and thrones—
Through sleepy crowds of idle drones,
'Tis Freedom's song the mass are singing,
So look out while the bell is ringing !

The slave will doff his yoke and chain,
The drunkard will not drink again,
The soldier'll throw his sword away ;
We see the dawn of that bright day,
Glad news the harnessed lightning bringing—
So look out while the bell is ringing !

ANECDOTES.

'How singular,' said a dandy, the other day, 'how singular it is that the head and stomach sympathize with each other.' 'Do yours' sympathize ?' asked a lady. 'Indeed they do,' answered whiskers ; 'my head and stomach are always in a similar condition.' 'Then,' said the fair tormentor, 'let me recommend to you Jayne's Tonic Vermifuge, for there is nothing better for a weak stomach.'

A Mississippi merchant named Ginn, advertises that he wishes it distinctly understood by those who hold paper with his name saddled upon it as an endorser, 'that he bluffs the whole arrangement. Those who hold claims against him upon that footing, can turn the screws and grind on ; and if they get the money before Ginn does, they can sing out.'

A justice of the peace wished to sell some land. The law required that his wife, before disposing of her right, should be examined before a justice of the peace as to her willingness, and our 'squire' determined to save the fee by making the examination himself. He then certified under his seal of office that he had examined his wife 'separate and apart from her husband !'

'Papa,' said a little fellow, as he looked up in his father's face, 'Papa, does the logwood they put into wine give it its red color ?'

'Yes, certainly.'

'Well, papa, is it the logwood in the wine that makes your nose so red ?'

'Hush your nonsense, child ; here, Betty, get a candle, and put this child to bed.'

An Irishman once riding to market with a sack of potatoes before him, discovered that his horse was getting tired, whereupon he dismounted, put the potatoes on his shoulders and again mounted, saying, 'It was better that I should carry the praties, as I am fresher than the poor baste.'

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
Child's Friend,
A Monthly Periodical for Young Persons.
EDITED BY MRS ELIZA L. FOLLEN.

A TRULY instructive as well as entertaining book for children is our simple object. Youthful life as it is, and as it ought to be, we would represent. All subjects that children can and ought to be interested in, we would lay before them. We shall seek to please and instruct our young readers, as we would if they were by our side, by setting before them the serious, perhaps sad, and then again the amusing incidents of real life ; sometimes in the twilight hour we will have a fairy story for them ; then if we or our friend can make them, we will give them conundrums or charades, or our own or our neighbors' jests, and now and then a short sermon, or a long history. We will, when so disposed, speak of the Sunday, of its precious rest, its beautiful recollections, its blessed uses ; but we would also urge upon our readers the great truth that every day is the Lord's day, that all our time must be devoted to duty, and that every hour well spent is a holy hour. We shall aspire to become truly the Child's Friend, helping him to learn from all that is within and around him the wisdom and goodness of the Creator,—that wrong doing produces discord and misery,—that life is a continued school time, and that wisdom and virtue and the peace they bring are the true holidays of life.

It is our sole and simple purpose to make this work such as we have described, a book that a child may read to advantage and with pleasure, on Sunday as well as every other day in the week.

The October No. begins a New Series ; being the commencement of the sixth year and eleventh Volume. It will be printed on new and handsome type and good paper. The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES.

Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz :

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc. etc. yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.

The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.

THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.

The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.

The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal ; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.

The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

Health Insurance Company.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A S DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England ; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled.

MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—
from the age of fifteen to forty five years :

Paying $3	a year,	draw $2	weekly.

MISCELLANY.

WHAT'S MY THOUGHT LIKE.

Gentle reader, did you ever play the game whose interrogatory name graces this veracious story? No. Ah! I thought not. Few, very few American ladies patronise the custom of games; they consider it puerile, and beneath the dignity of grown up children. They are mistaken. There is a wide field for imagination, wit, and even thought in many of the games so common amongst intellectual society in Europe. 'Acted Charades,' 'Bouts rimes,' 'Tableaux vivants,' 'Transposition,' 'Magical Poetry,' and last, not last, 'What's my thought like?'—all call for a ready fancy, quick repartee, and considerable acuteness of perception. They give scope to brilliant language and graceful motion. They make the memory familiar with striking events in history, or recall the beautiful pictures of Shakespeare, Byron, Dante, or Voltaire; they supply (especially in summer, when dancing is impossible) the listless void in society, which is otherwise filled up by cards or scandal; they form an interesting conversazione, in which all can take a share, and ao one individual be doomed, by mauvaise honte, or modesty, to the shade threwn by a loquacious bas bleue, or a professing professor.

Childish are they? Does an amusement of this sort ask less intellect than to sit discussing the last sleeve pattern, or Mrs Such-an-one's delicious bode cap? Or is it more consistant with la haute societe to desert some unhappy wretch who has left his or her character behind them, than to introduce an amusement, which, while it diverts the present circle, cannot wound the absent? When I enter a stranger's abode, I can almost immediately conceive the character of its inhabitants from the appearance of their sitting rooms. Who that perceives the vases filled with tastefully arranged flowers, fumeurs of ambergris, pot pourri and atta; fauteuils on which books or embroidery denote use and not show; music, and those dear delights of life, engravings and etchings, all assembled in that drawing room dishabbille, which is not carelessness; who but feels on the instant that they have entered the residence of taste and intellect? In the same way I never heard such games as I have mentioned proposed for a soiree's amusement without making a like conclusion as to the company I was in; and very seldom was I ever mistaken. The name of the last mentioned amusement suggests to me a singular story related by a French gentleman with whom I was acquainted while in Paris; I do not vouch for its veracity. I only tell the tale as 'twas told to me; yet if true, a remarkable prophecy was contained in the explanations given at the game of 'What's my thought like?'

It happened said the narrator, that I was included in a large party of the young and gay, who were beguiling the sunset hours with the sport you mention. It was at Fontainbleau, and were assembled in a shady garden, delicious as the softening light, the perfumed breeze, and the enamelled turf could make it. The rich west was robed in royal purple, and the slant rays of golden sunshine fell as memary's records of the past; while up sprang a single, solitary star, like the eye of love mourning the death of day. Among those who contributed most largely to the spirit and beauty of the game was a young girl called Gulietta; her other name I did not hear; indeed there seemed as if but one so called assisted, for all knew at once who was designed by Gulietta. Her skin was of that aristocratic or regal fairness, which generally accompanies high birth; and when color dwelt on her cheek, it was of that deep, flushed crimson, which is not natural; nothing but strong excitement disturbed the white rose's reign, on the most exquisitely sculptured face and bosom in the world. Although very gay, there was a dreaming absence, a species of double life in her eyes, that disturbed those who met her gaze; they belied the gay word and smile; as if the deep fountain was troubled without a breeze; so the prophetic and passionate depth of her glance seemed visionary and unreal. It may be that after associations have impressed my first recollections, but certainly as I now remember her, Gulietta was like the veiled Neitha of Egypt, whose motto is, 'I am, and none know why.'

She had developed the last puzzle, and consequently according to the rules, she was to be the next diviner. Desirous of perplexing her, the company agreed on an object or thing capable of various explanations, which were to be explained by smiles, and she was called in to guess it. How many and various were the likenesses and reasons given why! A crabbed gentleman likened his thought to a mirror, receiving all impressions, retaining none; his son, to the early dew, which the sunbeam kisses away. Three romantic damsels found similes in 'an infant's dream,' 'the green oasis of the wilderness,' and 'distant music; the buffoon of the party said it was like a good dinner, better hot than cold; while a would-be cynical, thought it more like the whizzing of a champagne cork; others interpreted the thought to be like glass—once fractored never repaired; the rainbow, beautiful but ideal; the sensitive plant, shrinking at a touch; the aloe, blossoming once in a century; the wild eagle, perishing if enthralled, &c. &c. So different were the various similes, that Gulietta seemed especially puzzled; she guessed 'Hope,' 'Happiness,' 'Woman,' 'Religion'; still a delighted no, no, rang through the circle. There remained but two more to ask; these she had purposely delayed until the last, hoping to divine it without the necessity of asking them; and as she now turned to the nearest, a rich gush of crimson dyed for a moment the usual paleness of her cheek. She whom she addressed was a young and wealthy, the only son of a rich banker; his countenance was handsome and his form fine; yet both vulgularly so. The smiles, which were never absent from his lips, were mingled with expression; the full expause of his fair forehead was unmarked by a single line af thought; and in the clear light of his eye, as in a shallow stream, you could behold too easily the bottom. He was the suitor of Gulietta, and already her companions talked of her wonderful good fortune; his preference was too much obtruded for feeling, and in his gallantry there was a mixture of gaucherie and conceit. In a word, Monsieur Eugene Varmontel was un parvenue.

'It is my turn now!' said he eagerly, as the rich flush faded from Gulietta's cheek. She turned to him.

'Eh bien, Monsieur Engene, what's your thought like?'

'It is like yourself,' responded he, with the eagerness of a person who has conned a good thing, and is afraid to lose the chance of displaying it.

'And why?'

'Because, like you,

"It rules the court, the camp, the grove;
For love is heaven,—and you are love."

'Oh! that's too plain, Eugene,' called several of the party. Gulietta, however, appeared not to guess it; to the keen eye of a close observer there passed a shower over her expressive face, and a frown darkened her eye, though it left her brow unclouded. Eugene however, was far from remarking it; and with a joyous laugh he called out

'Oh! now you must surely guess it.'

'Like me!' she said, thoughtfully; you puzzle me indeed; surely it must be something oxquisite and lovely; perhaps it is the apple of the Dead Sea you mean; they are fair enough to view; but ah! I forgot—they are rottenness within. I cannot divine your meaning.'

She turned to the last of the company, who had not spoken; and while her pale cheek seemed paler for the struggle, said cheerfully,

'Signor Guido C'Este, you are the last chance to save me from the reputation of dulliness. Pray be less metaphorical than your predecessors and say to you, signor, what is your thought like?'

The Italion raised his dark, lustrous eyes, and while a smile of equivocal meaning wreathed his chisselled lip, he answered, in tones like richest music,

'My thought is like to light.'

A scarcely perceptible tremble broke the melody of the single word she uttered,

'Why?'

'Because it partakes of two natures, Culietta. The one is as the morning star—calmly bright and purely beautiful; the herald of joy, and harbinger of hope; the rainbow glory that dispels the gloom, and whispers to the heart of peace, and truth, and heaven! The other is the lightning's flash, glaring amid the storm, and blasting where it falls; the meteoric blaze riding on clouds of chaos and despair; blinding the eye of love, and blighting the heart of youth; the ignis iatuus, which shines from death and rottenness; the lurid glare of opening hell! Can you not guess it? Nay, then, I'll tell you. It is Love! Love, Gulietta; faithful, it is a lumbent torch; betrayed, a full consuming fire!'

The wild vehemence of the Italion produced a startling effect; suddenly the sport seemed changed to terror. But I looked only on the girl to whom this burst of passion had been addressed. At first I thought, from the fearful, stony whiteness of her features, that she would have fainted; but when she raised her eye, I saw it was but the body quailed; the soul sat there triumphant, and dared the storm.

Proudly, scornfully, unquailingly, she met his gaze; her full eye fixed with a cold, intense, serpent look on his; then turning with careless derision from him, she linked her arm in Eugene's and said:

'It must have cost le pauvre Italien a vast deal of study to manufacture that long speech; but since he has broke the good meeting and displaced the mirth,' let us walk. Allons! I am tired of this.'

She was very beautiful—very! and the gifts of nature had equally embellished that powerful mind; yet would I not then have called Gulietta my wife for the dominfon of the world, and the wealth of the deep! I left Paris in about three weeks after; but not before I heard of the marriage between Monsieur Eugene Varmontel and the beautiful Gulietta. The papers were eloquent about the jewels, the blonde, and the settlements; the bride's tiaa, and cordoliere of brilliants, were rated at an emperor's raysom; and the bridegroom's hotel, carriages, services of gold plate, &c. equallee that of imperial royalty. And for this—for these, she sold herself, body and soul; and trampled on the heart that loved her. Who is it can call ambition a godlike crime?

It was the deep and awful mystery of midnight; the world's repose and nature's death; when the waters lie hushed and still, for heaven to mirror itself in their depths; and the crimson and the purple have passed in their rosy light away, and the myrtle and ilex, and acacie boughs, droop with the heavy dew, as though they wept the absence of the sun. The night, the voiceless, spiritual night—how beautiful it is! The cold, unbroken blue of heaven—the pure, ethereal light, which marbles the earth with its monumental light—the deep and lonely silence—how they reprove the maddening passions of men; how, with a thousand voiceless tongues, they prophecy of death! Death! ay, but a night of death, on which the sun of life will rise; a longer sleep, in which the unclaimed soul will burst its carnal house, to rise above the hopes and fears of perishing humanity, and seek its native essence in its God; a deeper shadow than the ignorance that darkens life; but which must vanish when the fount of Light is opened! Oh! who that has sighed and pined for knowledge here; who that has sickened, to feel the mind bound down and trammelled by the chains of clay; who that has felt this world but one vast sepulchre, dimly lighted with uncertain glimmers—who does not revel in the glorious hope, that with the body's death the spirit's life begins? The wide, unbounded ether, the illimitable space, the vast expanse of dazzling light, where knowledge resigns a god, and truth is as the air we breathe! Will not this be the spirit's home? Is not this its hope for heaven? Alas! alas! why is it that passions clouds, and sin defiles the earth? It is the want of knowledge. Could the soul drink the living light, the corruption of dust must perish; and man be, what ignorance alone forbids, godlike and immortal!

It was night in a southern clime! a sculptor sat still in his studies—he had finished with the parting rays of sunset, the last production of his chissel, and he sat since in motionless contemplation of his work. Day had faded in the west, and when the ebbing sunshine kissed the sculptured head, the last struggle of vanishing affection fled;—twilight deepened into gloom, and the darkness of broken faith obscured its image in his heart. What though the moonlight gave it again to view, it was with a cold, unearthly halo that chilled the gazer's soul. Damp and faint fell the dews from his brow; and as in weakness, he lent for a moment on the marble, it was not colder than his hand—Guido, the sculptor, was dying! The marble figure his unequalled skill had just completed, was that of a lovely female, clothed in the terrible insigna of Atropos. A gorgon heaven—one heart to stone. The smile was cold and pitiless, and in the firm, exulting attitude, there seemed the terrible triumph of power.

'Even so,' he said, and those tones which once came deep and mellowed as the voice of the silver trumpet, were broken and feble now. 'Even so, thou has been my fate, and hast triumphed over the heart thou hast broken! Thou hast mounted the victorious car of the merciless idol, and hast driven proudly o'er thy victim. The genius which was thy slave, the heart which was thy worshiper, the proud imaginings, the fervent aspirations, the holy love that waited on thy smile, thou hast broken and crushed forever! A silver dove, whose plumes were bright with sunshine, bore to thy breast the olive branch of peace, and would have rested there—thy hand drove the heaven winged messenger away—and in its place, the vulture of remorse shall make thy heart his home. Gulietta! to a life unblessed, a death unpitied, and a grave unsought, thy broken faith has doomed thee! Gulietta, my first, last and only love, thou hast made the grave my refuge—and for thee, the shadow of early death is on my soul, but dreadful shall the retribution be! All heaven and earth find voices to curse the broken oath! The murmuring waters will mock thee with my groans—the evening breeze sweep by thee laden with my dying breath—and in the stars' mysterious scroll, shalt thou read vengeance on thy perjury! Sea, air and earth, shall have for thee one only language—hark! already they cry to the faithless one, DESPAIR.'

A loud and maddened shriek burst upon the dreary silence! She was there! there, by the side of her forsaken, dying lover! In vain she kneels, and bears his head upon her jewelled bosom—in vain she calls, in tones of wild endearment upon his injured name—in vain, tears down her gem-enwreathed locks, to bind his rigid brow! The silver cord was loosed, the golden bowl was broken, the spirit of the forsaken had passed away for ever.

* * * * *

When the golden amber dyes the east, and the arrow of crimson come forth like a flight of Paradise birds—when the royal purple of mourning pavilions the sky, or the magnificent rainbow spans the mighty forest—when the glorious autumn, Nature's prodigal, casts the bright leaves to earth, and the zephyr sweeps by laden with incense—the sunlight, the blossoms, the perfume falls upon Gurdo's lonely grave! Apart, alone, like some separate and holy thing, he slees—the spiritual rose springs blushing from his grave, and her beauty is undefiled by sign or stone of man's erecting. But how lives she—the false, the forsworn? Does the glitter and the glare around her—revels she still among the mighty ones of earth, bedecked with gems and wreathed for sacrifice? No! there the name of Gulietta is heard no more. Behoid you yon frowning battlements? There the chains rust, and the shriek echoes—there the laugh bespeaks no merriment, and the tear no sorrow—that is Gulietta's abode! Madness! ay, madness! the world calls it so—and they know not the wild visions which break the maniac's trance. Mad! could we know ourselves and our terrible destiny, we should all rave and make the earth one universal cell. There, in the fearful unrest of remorse and unavailing wo; there, with visitors who come unbidden from the grave, to glare upon her with her starry eyes—there, where an eternal chorus rings of the broken faith, and perjured love—there does Gulietta learn that faithful love is a lambent torch—betrayed affection, a consuming fire!

CENTRE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

MR. EDITOR:—My attention was called a few days since to the controversy in which we were engaged several years ago, in which the District was plaintiff, and Mr. Charles P. Tirrell and others were defendants: and I was inquired of why the individuals who had signed a paper agreeing to sustain Mr. Tirrell had not been called upon to defray the expenses to which he had been subjected in his defence. The inquiry was made by one who was quite desirous and willing to contribute his proportion (or more if necessary) to accomplish that purpose. Mr. Tirrell was urged to defend the suit by those who believed him to be right, and who agreed to sustain him therein; and therefore it seems to be proper that after the battle has been fought, some steps should be taken to reimburse Mr. Tirrell for the expenditures by him made in the matter. They were large, and Mr. Tirrell ought to be relieved from the burden which came upon him, but as no relief has been tendered to him, it seems to me no more than justice, that some one should act in the matter. I have no doubt that all our citizens, who subscribed to the paper drawn up, would willingly give something to relieve Mr. Tirrell. The expenses exceeded one hundred and fifty dollars, and it is well known that such a sum to Mr. T., is of considerable importance. I, for one, am anxious for Mr. Tirrell's sake, that the matter Tirrell should cause a subscription paper to be drawn up and presented to each of the signers of the original agreement (comprising our wealthiest and most respected citizens) I feel assured that in a few days a sufficient sum could be collected to meet the expenses sustained by him in defending the actions brought against him in behalf of the district.

I hope that the settlement will be no longer delayed, and that early the coming week an opportunity will be given to every signer of the original agreement to pay something towards relieving Mr. Tirrell, not merely as an act of liberality—but rather of simple justice.

SABBATH SCHOOL EXHIBITION.

On Tuesday evening, the 14th inst., we were present at a public exhibition of the scholars of the SECOND CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY in Milton, held in their Stone Church in the Railway Village. A capacious platform was erected for the occasion in front of the Pulpit, so elevated, that the audience from every part of the Church, had a fine view of the performance.

The exercises consisted of Djalogues, occasionally interspersed with Singing, and single desertations on moral and religious subjects by the several Pupils of the school, of both sexes, from four to sixteen years of age; the interest of the occasion was heightened by the presence of some of the Sabbath School pupils, from the Unitarian Church, in Summer Street, Boston, who kindly volunteered, by taking part in the exercises. The evening was beautiful for the season, and the Meeting House well filled. The pieces as arranged in the Order of Exercises, were most judiciously selected and admirably adapted for the exhibition; but the delivery (with some slight exceptions) was most gratifying to the numerous audience. Many of the pieces were spoken with a spirit, grace and eloquence, that would not discredit the public declamations of Old Harvard. Mrs. Heman's celebrated Hymn—"The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers," was delivered by Master E. Adams, with much animation and eloquence—the performances of two litule daughters of Mr. H. S. Emery, and the daughter of Capt. Noah Cummings, attracted much attention; and the pupils from Boston, whose names we do not now recollect, made a most favorable and we doubt not lasting impression, by the beauty of their delivery. We have seldom heard better speakers as to perspicuity and clearness of enunciation; every monasylloble of their utterance was heard by all. The Dialogue of the "Rainbow" by seven little pupils of the school; attired in dresses corresponding with the prismatic colors of the rainbow, may be said to have exceeded all others in interest. The delivery was beautiful and affecting to the audience, as manifested by many a moistened eye. We love to visit such places and such scenes. The beauty and excellence of christian truth presented to the human mind, so pleasant to the senses, so delightful to the ear, so charming to the best sentiments of the heart, and that to, through the avenues of youthful and even infantile eloquence could not have failed we humbly believe, to have made many present on that evening, return to their homes with more devout aspirations to Heaven, and more strengthened in their christian faith. The Sabbath School of the Railway Church, consists of some 70 scholars, who have been under the general superintendance of Mr. Thayer, formerly of Boston, but now of Milton, assisted by several young ladies and gentleman of Milton, as sub-teachers. Mr. Thayer is favorably known as a most excellent and worthy Sabbath-school teacher, as his success in Boston for many years, and at Milton for six months past plainly shows. He certainly deserves great credit from the parents of the scholars; but we doubt not he aspires to a higher reward than earth can give, for his efforts to inculcate piety in the young and tender heart. The Rev. Mr. Kimball the pastor of the society, has taken a deep interest in the success of the Sabbath school. Since his sojourn there, for nearly a year past, he has been faithful and laborious in all his efforts to advance the school, and the interest of the Society; and we are glad to learn his labors have been blessed with success in this hitherto, feeble, religious society.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, NOV 25, 1848.

John A. Green, Editor.

LEGISLATURE. General Court assembled on Tuesday last, for the choice of Presidential electors. A vacancy in the Senate has been filled. As yet no ballotings has been had for electors.

DROWNED. A young woman, about twenty-two years of age, was found drowned in the Quincy Canal, last Thursday morning. She lived in the vicinity, and her mind had been wandering.

MAYOR OF BOSTON. Hon. John P. Bigelow has been unanimously nominated for the office of Mayor, the Hon. Josiah Quincy, Jr., having declined a re-election. This is the most popular nomination that could have been made, as the nominee is universally respected. His character in every sense is without reproach.

BOSTON ALMANAC. This old calendar, stored with the usual variety of interesting reading, has again made its appearance. The maps of Boston and its vicinity is alone worth the price of the almanac. Read the advertisement, and call at Gill's Bookstore, and there the neat volume may be purchased.

THANKSGIVING CHOWDER. "Yankee Seth" is on hand Thanksgiving eve and will "serve up" a clam chowder "for the millions." The above is an extraordinary occasion, and he intends to do the neat thing. He cannot be beat in anything he undertakes.

Remember that he has a good chowder this evening, and wishes to see his friends previous to his excellent and all superior preparation the evening previous to the Old Bay State festival.

FOUL MURDER. A man in the purlieus of Ann street, Boston, while, as is supposed, in a state of intoxication, murdered his while, a few days since, by strangling her in a most brutal manner. The deed was committed in a cellar in the night, and the man is committed for trial.

The New York Tribune says that the Van Buren Free Soil men will hold the balance of power in the next term of the present Congress.

The Boston Christian World says that Rev. Caleb Stetson of Medford, has excepted the invitation of the Unitarian Society in South Scituate, to become their pastor.

Sixty battles were fought during the Revolutionary war, thirty-eight during the last war with Great Britain; and thirty-two, in all, during the late war with Mexico.

The entire vote cast for Van Buren at the late election is estimated at 380,000. Taylor's majority over Cass will be over 100,000. The popular vote against Cass will be over 400,000, against Taylor 150,000 to 200,000.

The Mayor of Boston, in a short address at the Reservoir in Brookline, a few days since, said that sixteen hundred families in Boston are already provided with a supply of the Chochituate water.

Sixty-five Indian tribes are now under the protection of the United States government, exclusive of those in Oregon, California, and New Mexico.

The Ohio Penitentiary is lighted with gas. It enables the prisoners to read good books during the long evenings after the labors of the day are over.

Rev. Albert A. Folsom formerly of Hingham, died at Springfield on the 12th inst., aged 42 years. The cause of his death is stated to have been sciatic rheumatism.

Milliken's Temperance Restorator, in Boston, is "is one of the places" to get a dinner at. We recommend our friends to try it.

Has the Lynn News visited this place, and experienced the good fare at th is establishment. Milliken's place in our opinion is not worth the notice bestowed, What a humbug!!

Of the United States regular army about thirty-five thousand men are entitled to bounty lands. The volunteers who are entitled to these lands are about fifty-five thousand 14,400,000 acres of land will be required to satisfy the claims of the soldiers in the Mexican war. This land at the goverument price is worth eighteen millions two hunderd thousand dollars.

Upwards of one hundred fancy and other balls are advertised in New York, chiefly by military and civic associations.

It is intended that for the present the fountain on Boston Common shall play from nine o'clock, in the morning to five in the evening, on every pleasant day.

As soon as the new railroad is finished from New York to New Haven, it is said that the whole distance to Boston will be accomplished in the short space of eight hours.

The late John Jacob Astor's personal property has been scertained to amount to four millions of dollars. The value of his real estate has not yet been fixed.

NOTICES.

The subscribers will meet at their room in the Town Hall, on the LAST SATURDAY in each month, from two till five o'clock, in the afternoon. Persons having business with the town are requested to transact it on said days.

It is really astonishing to see what wonderful cures are performed by the use of the Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters.

[Extract of a letter from Dr Williams of Vt]

Gentlemen—I will thank you to send me two dozen more of your Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters. I have used it with great success in four cases of dyspepsia, curing each of them in an almost incredible short time; likewise one case of scrofulous humor and one of jaundice. I consider it a valuable compound, and must say I have used it with the happiest effects. Should like to have it as soon as convenient. One of the cases of dyspepsia was a gentleman who had suffered a long time, and had been to the Springs for two seasons.

A. Borden, Esq of Cambridge, cured of the dyspepsia of a year standing, after trying a hundred remedies without the least effect.

REMEDY FOR BRONCHITIS

Boston, May 25th, 1847.

Mr. Seth W Fowle,

DEAR SIR:—There are so many quack medicines at the present time, and each one has more or less certificates from real or imaginary individuals, that I have for some time had doubts of the propriety of giving any testimony in favor of your medicine But being assured that I have been benefitted by its use, and feeling satisfied that by giving in my testimony in regard to its medicinal qualities, I may, perhaps, be the means of saving some one similarly afflicted, I therefore cheerfully add my testimony in favor of the medicine that I know has done me great good I have been afflicted with the Bronchitis for a number of years, and by the use of a couple of bottles of

WISTER'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY,

I am happy to say that I am almost free from the above troublesome disease.

If this should be the means of saving even one of my fellow beings from that most troublesome and painful disease, (Bronchitis) I shall be fully paid for my trouble in writing the above communication.

Respectfully yours,
B COVERT, Vocalist,
Firm of Covert & Dodge.

We take pleasure in transferring the above certificate of Mr Covert, in favor of the curative properties of Wister's Balsam of Wild Cherry, to our columns. Mr Covert (of the firm of Covert & Dodge, Vocalists) has been long and favorably known in this city and vicinity as a vocalist of rare attainments. We have watched with painful anxiety his declining health from the disease of which he speaks, and have almost despaired of his recovery; yes, we placed him in the catalogue of incurables; but thanks to the virtues of Dr. Wister's Balsam, he is now, greatly to our surprise, enjoying most excellent health. Worms! Worms!!

ARE safely, speedily and most effectually expelled from the system by the use of

WHITWELLS PINK ROOT SYRUP.

Spigilia, or Indian Pink,

has been in use for hundreds of years among the Indian tribes of North America, as a certain remedy for Worms

Almost every family in N. E., is acquainted with its use. The great and only objection heretofore to its use, has been that it was necessary to pour half a pint down a childs throat in order to destroy and expell the worms; but that objection exists no longer, In the PINK ROOT SYRUP, you have the strongest possible preparation of the Pink root, united with CATHARTICS and TONICS, made into a pleasant and healthful SYRUP, which children will take without any trouble. Indeed, they like it much, and will never refuse to take it. The dose of this agreeable medicine for an infant is only

Half a Teaspoon Full.

Full and ample directions accompany its use. The public are respectfully requested to give it a trial, and they will never use any other remedy.

The Globe:

A Congressional, Agricultural and Literary Newspaper.

THE Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur; and a Congressional Globe periodically, as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source that may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in scientific and practical works on agriculture For material, the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects, will be consulted, and, it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Globe, as a newspaper, and as a vehicle of information and amusement in other respects, will be under the charge of Francis P Blair and James C. Pickett. The Congressional department and business concerns of the paper will be under the management of John C Rives. The public are familiar with Blair and Rives connected with the press. In introducing Mr Pickett as one of the concern, they will be allowed to say a few words of him. He is a gentleman favorably known to the Government, for the talent and judgment which distinguished his diplomatic service while connected with the mission to Quito; and more recently when Charge d'Affaires to Peru. From his pen mainly the Globe will derive the selections and translations from the French journals and periodicals, the comments on them, and the other literary articles, which will be found among its chief attractions

The Globe will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the balance of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a Weekly Globe, a Congressional Globe, and an Appendix.

The Weekly Globe will be the vehicle of the miscellaneous articles of the daily print, with a synopsis of the Congressional proceedings.

The Congressional Globe will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States, and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments

The Congressional Globe and Appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue. The Editors of the Globe have borne their share in the party conflicts of the press. They claim an honorable discharge from the vocation. The Globe will inviolably maintain the neutrality which its relation to Congress imposes.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year, - - - - - - $5 00
For one copy of the Weekly Globe one year, 2 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of January, - - - - 1 00

Health Insurance Company.

Capital $50.000.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.

Gen. H. A. S DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casualty disabled. MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—

from the age of fifteen to forty five years:

There's no mistake about it.

What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.

A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
Which struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.

Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it:
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.

RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

The Boston Almanac for 1849,
BY S. N. DICKINSON,

WILL be publised about the 1st of December. It will be printed upon new type, and contain more pages than any previous number. Beautifully bound in cloth, and gilt. It will contain

A new and accurate MAP of the vicinity of Boston, embracing a distance of 15 or 20 miles around the city. Long Pond, and the whole line of the Aqueduct are delineated upon it. The outside towns on the Map, are Hull, Cohasset. Hingham, Weymouth, Braintree, Canton, Dedham, Medford, Sherburne, Framingham, Sudbury, Concord, Acton, Carlisle, Billerica, Wilmington, Danvers, Beverly and Marblehead All the Islands in the harbor are set down The Watering Places—Phillips Beach, Nahant Bay and Beach, Nahant, Chelsea Beach, etc.

An improved set of CALENDAR PAGES, calculated by Prof. Pierce, of Cambridge. The calendar pages are accompanied by a short description of the appearance of the Heavens on the 15th of each month Opposite to each calender page there is a blank leaf for memorandums, containing a blank line and date for every day in the month These MEMORANDA PAGES are of great convenience to an individual, or for the use of a family, in making memorandums from day to day

The BUSINESS DIRECTORY of the city of Boston, corrected and enlarged This Directory exhibits all trades, business and professions under their appropriate heads; that is under the head Apothecaries. will be found the names of all persons engaged in that business; under the head of Bakers, the names and places of all engaged in that business, and so on to the end of the alphabet. This document is one of great usefulness to the citizen, and of still greater importence to persons in the country, as here they have laid before them the key to the whole business population of the metropolis. It occupies about 80 closely printed pages of the Almanac.

An interesting historical account of the PUBLIC SCHOOLS of Boston This article has been prepared with great care and much research, by Isaac F. Shepard, Esq, Principal of the Otis School. It embraces the subject from that period of time when public schools were first thought of by our forefathers, and traces it up, in its growth, from that time to the present It is deeply interesting, and occupies 36 pages of the Almanac An ENGRAVED VIEW of each of the Public Schools is given, and two views of Model Primary Schools, which have been erected within the past year or two.

Some account of a WINTER PASSED IN FLORIDA, by an invalid, in hopes of being restored to health His experience given, which may be of great convenience to those intending to visit that region for a similar purpose. Accompanying this article, the writer has prepared a set of WEATHER TABLES, showing the temperature in Jacksonville, Florida, and Boston, for one year To the curious in such matters, it is thought these tables will be very interesting.

A Table of the 772 Streets, Places and Alleys in the city of Boston, giving the beginning and terminus of each street, and the location of the places and alleys. With this table the stranger can find any street in the city

A list of 227 EXPRESSES that leave Boston daily, semi-weekly and weekly.

A list of the RAIL-ROADS diverging from Boston, and a list of the Branch Roads running from the Boston Roads

These are the principal features of the Boston Almanac for 1849. But it embraces a great variety of other matters, useful and entertaining to the reader.

This Almanac contains TWO HUNDRED and TWENTY closely printed pages. The quantity of matter is greater than that found in an ordinary 8vo. of 500 pages. The octavo volume would sell for two or three dollars. For the Almanac, the prize is only TWENTY FIVE CENTS, per single copy. By wholesale, a very liberal discount is made.

Orders sent to Messrs B B. MUSSEY & Co., 29 Cornhill, and to Mr. THOMAS GROOM, 82 State Street, Publishers, will meet with immediate attention. 3w Boston, Nov. 18.

Encourage your Own.

To the People of Quincy—

THE following is a well known motto, and strictly true:

"That County or Town that gives the most liberal encouragement to its own manufactures of every kind is well known to thrive, and increase in wealth and population"

There are a few interesting facts, of which we wish to remind you, and which we are inclined to think have slipped from the memory of some, and which it will be for your advantage as well as ours to remember.

1st. That at the QUINCY BOOKSTORE you will find all the

in use in this and the neighboring towns.

2d. That at the same place you will find every kind of

Blank Account Book,
RECORD or MEMORANDUM BOOK.

3d. That there you will find a great assortment of Miscellaneous, Juvenile and Toy Books.

4th. That there you will find all kinds of

STATIONERY.

5th. That there you will find an innumerable variety of

FANCY GOODS.

6th. That all the above will be sold at the very

Lowest Market Prices.

7th. That we are entirely disinterested when we say that you will be much better satisfied with yourselves and your bargains if you trade at home, in preference to "out of town."

8th. That there you will find a GOOD LIBRARY where you can procure reading on reasonable terms.

9th. That the Proprietors are agents for all the popular MAGAZINES, receiving the subscriptions themselves and furnishing the numbers on their own responsibility, free of any expense. Many have forgotten this of late, preferring to subscribe of some travelling agent, to one in their own town

10th That they RE BIND old Books, Pamphlets, Periodicals, Music, etc, "as cheap as they can afford to and as quick as anybody"

These things we wish to call to your memory, because while we have been moving on in a quiet kind of a way, you seem partly to have forgotten the old place, thinking perhaps that we did not keep up with the times in the variety of our goods and also in prices Our rule, like that of many others, is, "quick sales and small profits," therefore call in and we will supply you most satisfactorily.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

COLD WATER.

Come listen while I of cold water will sing,
For what with its worth can compare?
How sparkling it flows from the clear bubbling spring,
Commingling its sweets with the air.

When thirsty and footworn I travel'd along,
No riv'let or dwelling was there,
My poor panting dog loll'd his fever scorch'd tongue,
And snuff'd the hot wind in despair.

When far in the distance a something look'd bright
Reflecting the rays of the sun,
I hasten'd my pace overjoyed with delight
While Tray started off on the run.

Tho' fainting and weary I follow'd him near,
He plunged to his ears in the tide;
A cool crystal fountain was bubbling up here,
I sat myself down by its side.

With prudence I bathed both my hands and my face,
Then laid my parch'd lips to the brink,
And bless'd the good God of the whole human race,
Who pour'd out his treasure in that desert place,
And gave me cool water to drink.

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

THE MARINER'S WIFE.

Ah me, how wild the north wind blows,—
The drifting snow, how white it flies!
The cheerless night, how slow it goes!
I wonder where my husband lies?
Now rides he on the fretful wave—
Or clings he to some rocky shore—
Or has the mermaid spread his grave
Down where the lightless billows roar?

The blasts such terrors o'er me bring,
I dare not close my eyes again;
For if I sleep, my thoughts will wing
Their way unto the angry main—
And frightful rocks, and wrecks, and men
With livid lips, I'll then behold—
And every yawning wave will then
New terrors to my view unfold.

My child, sleep on—thou dost not know
The risk thy father dares for thee;
That little cheek would lose its glow,
Could thy soft eyes his danger see.
But thou wilt be a seaman too—
Thy form will hunt a seaman's grave,
And thou wilt love the billows blue,
And learn to laugh where tempests rave.

But hark! the winds have fallen now—
Their howl is changed to whispers low;
The heat of terror leaves my brow—
Sleep, heavy sleep, comes on me now,
Where'er my husband's barque doth ride—
In stormy bay—on ocean's breast—
Kind fortune ever there abide,
And peace, be thou his constant guest.

A SONG FOR THE TIMES.

Turkeys who for us have bled;
Turkeys who on corn have fed;
Welcome to us, now you're dead,
And in the frost have hung.

Now's the day, and now's the hour;
Through the market how we scour,
Seeking turkies to devour;
Turkeys old and young.

Who would be a turkey hen!
Fed and fattened in a pen!
Killed and ate by hungry men!
Can you tell, I pray?

Lay the proud old turkies low;
Let the young ones fat and grow;
To market they are not fit to go,
Till next Christmas day.

ANECDOTES.

A fellow was engaged to a girl in Maine, but liked her sister better than he did her. Wishing to be off with the old love before he was on with the new, he asked his betrothed what she would take to release him—she replied that about sixty two dollars, she thought, was as much as he was worth; whereupon he ponied up the dust, took a quit claim, and married the sister.

A lady the other day was asked by an envious female acquaintance, her age: 'Really,' said she, 'I do not know, but I must be about thirty.' 'It is very extraordinary,' replied the other with a sneer, 'that you do not know your age.' 'I never count my years,' said the lady; 'I'm not afraid of losing a single year; none of my female friends will rob me of one of them.'

'Good news for me!' exclaimed a certain person, as he took up a newspaper, 'who having been all his life a Port-wine drinker, I'm now ordered to drink nothing but water! Here is a project for supplying the metropolis with the element.' 'Then, from force of habit,' said Poole, 'I suppose you'll lay down a pipe.'

A professional scribe (a Persian) being applied to by some one to write a letter, replied that he had something the matter with his foot. 'Of what consequence is that?' said the applicant, 'I do not want you to carry the letter.' 'No,' returned the other, 'but if I write a letter, I am sure to be sent for to read it—for no one else can.'

'Not up yet?' said a friend, calling upon another, who was fond of indulging in morning and day dreams, 'not up yet? Why, I have been stirring these four hours.' 'Very likely,' added the friend, 'you could not have done more had you been a spoon.'

The first Lord Lyttleton was very absent in company, and when he fell into a river by the oversetting of a boat, it was said of him that he had 'sunk twice before he recollected he could swim.'

'Is this raal bogany,' said a green horn, who was astonished at the lustre of an elegant mahogany table in a gentleman's parlor, at the same time taking out his jackknife, and shaving off a large slice of the edge—'Wal I swow to, aint it?'

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
Child's Friend,
A Monthly Periodical for Young Persons.
EDITED BY MRS ELIZA L. FOLLEN.

A TRULY instructive as well as entertaining book for children is our simple object. Youthful life as it is, and as it ought to be, we would represent. All subjects that children can and ought to be interested in, we would lay before them. We shall seek to please and instruct our young readers, as we would if they were by our side, by setting before them the serious, perhaps sad, and then again the amusing incidents of real life; sometimes in the twilight hour we will have a fairy story for them; then if we or our friend can make them, we will give them conundrums or charades, or our own or our neighbors' jests, and now and then a short sermon, or a long history. We will, when so disposed, speak of the Sunday, of its precious rest, its beautiful recollections, its blessed uses; but we would also urge upon our readers the great truth that every day is the Lord's day, that all our time must be devoted to duty, and that every hour well spent is a holy hour. We shall aspire to become truly the Child's Friend, helping him to learn from all that is within and around him the wisdom and goodness of the Creator,—that wrong doing produces discord and misery,—that life is a continued school time, and that wisdom and virtue and the peace they bring are the true holidays of life.

It is our sole and simple purpose to make this work such as we have described, a book that a child may read to advantage and with pleasure, on Sunday as well as every other day in the week.

The October No. begins a New Series; being the commencement of the sixth year and eleventh Volume. It will be printed on new and handsome type and good paper. Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of

Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all

Diseases of the Blood,

such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated

Dandelion Panacea,

an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibilious remedy on record.

The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No. 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES.

Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc, etc, yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVERRIGN. Price 25 cents per box.

The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.

THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.

The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immensurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.

The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.

The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A. S. DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed, young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled.

MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—

From the age of fifteen to forty five years:

AMERICAN PERSEVERANCE.

We find the following remarkable narrative of the sufferings, perseverance, and final success of a rare American genius, in Hunt's Merchant's Magazine, for November, addressed to the late Hon. Dixon H. Lewis. The writer is a native of Virginia, and he went to England in January, 1847, to look for the appreciation which he had not found in Washington:—

Stafford, (England,) August 15, 1848.

MY DEAR SIR—I should have written sooner, but that I had nothing pleasant to say. I reached London on the 1st of January, 1847, without money or friends, which was just the thing I desired when I left America, and just the thing, I assure you, I will never desire again. I commenced opperations at once, on the supposition that in this overgrown city, I would at least enlist one man. But Englishmen are not Americans. An Englishman will advance any amount on an absolute certainty, but not one penny where there is the slightest risk, if he got the whole world by it. I spent the first five months looking for this man with unparalleled perseverance and industry, living for less than three pence per day. I am convinced that few persons in London know so much of that incomprehensibly large city as myself. But, alas! my wardrobe was gone to supply me with wretchedly baked corn bread, on which I lived entirely. I slept on straw, for which I paid a half-penny per night. I became ragged and filthy, and could no longer go among men of business. Up to this time, my spirits never sank, nor did they then, but my sufferings were great. My limbs distorted with rheumatism, induced by cold and exposure—my face and head swelled to a most unnatural size with cold and tooth-ache, and those who slept in the same horrid den with myself were wretched street beggars—the very cleanest of them literlly alive with all manner of creeping things. But I was no beggar. I never begged, nor even asked a favor of any man since I came to England. Ask George Bancroft, who I called upon two or three times, if ever I asked the slightest favor, or even presumed upon the letter you gave me to him. I did write him a note, asking him to come and witness the triumph of opening the bridge at the Gardens, and delivered the note at his own house myself; and although Prince Albert came, I never got even a reply to my note. If Bancroft had come, and been the man to have only recognized me in my rags, as I was, it would have saved me much subsequent suffering. I will not believe that Bancroft ever saw my note, for his deportment to me was ever kind.

The succeeding three months, after the first five, I will not detail, up to the time I commenced to build the bridge. I will not harrow up my feelings to write, nor pain your kind heart to read, the incidents of those ninety days. My head turned grey, and I must have died but for the Jews, who did give me one shilling down for my acknowledgment for £10 on demand. These wicked robberies have amounted to several hundred pounds, every penny of which I have had to pay subsequently; for since my success at Stafford, not a man in England who can read, but knows my address. It cost me £10 to obtain the shilling with which I paid my admittance into the Royal Zoological Gardens, where I succeeded, after much mortification, in getting the ghost of a model made of the bridge. The model, although a bad one, astonished every body. Every engineer of celebrity in London, was called in to decide whether it was practicable to throw it across the lake. Four or five of them, at the final decision, declared that

But, alas! my wardrobe was gone to supply me with wretchedly baked corn bread, on which I lived entirely. I slept on straw, for which I paid a half-penny per night. I became ragged and filthy, and could no longer go among men of business. Up to this time, my spirits never sank, nor did they then, but my sufferings were great. My limbs distorted with rheumatism, induced by cold and exposure—my face and head swelled to a most unnatural size with cold and tooth-ache, and those who slept in the same horrid den with myself were wretched street beggars—the very cleanest of them literlly alive with all manner of creeping things. But I was no beggar. I never begged, nor even asked a favor of any man since I came to England. Ask George Bancroft, who I called upon two or three times, if ever I asked the slightest favor, or even presumed upon the letter you gave me to him. I did write him a uote, asking him to come and witness the triumph of opening the bridge at the Gardens, and delivered the note at his own house myself; and although Prince Albert came, I never got even a reply to my note. If Bancroft had come, and been the man to have only recognized me in my rags, as I was, it would have saved me much subsequent suffering. I will not believe that Bancroft ever saw my note, for his deportment to me was ever kind.

The succeeding three months, after the first five, I will not detail, up to the time I commenced to build the bridge. I will not harrow up my feelings to write, nor pain your kind heart to read, the incidents of those ninety days. My head turned grey, and I must have died but for the Jews, who did give me one shilling down for my acknowledgment for £10 on demand. These wicked robberies have amounted to several hundred pounds, every penny of which I have had to pay subsequently; for since my success at Stafford, not a man in England who can read, but knows my address. It cost me £10 to obtain the shilling with which I paid my admittance into the Royal Zoological Gardens, where I succeeded, after much mortification, in getting the ghost of a model made of the bridge. The model, although a bad one, astonished every body. Every engineer of celebrity in London, was called in to decide whether it was practicable to throw it across the lake. Four or five of them, at the final decision, declared that the model before them was passing strange, but that it could not be carried to a much greater length than the length of the model. This was the point of life or death with me. I was standing amidst men of the supposed greatest talents as civil engineers that the world could produce, and the point decided against me. This one time alone were my energies ever aroused. I never talked before; I was haggard and faint for the want of food; my spirits sunk in sorrow in view of my mournful prospects; clothes I had none; yet standing over this model, did I battle with those men. Every word I uttered came from my inmost soul, and was big with truth—every argument carried conviction. The effect on those men was like magic—indeed they must have been devils not to have believed under the circumstances. I succeeded. My agreement with the proprietor was, that I should superintend the construction of the bridge, without any pay whatever; but during the time of the building, I might sleep in the Gardens, and if the bridge should succeed, it should be called "Remington's Bridge."

I lodged in an old lion's cage—not strong enough for a lion—but by putting some straw on the floor, it held me very well, and indeed, was a greater luxury than I had for many months. The carpenters that worked on the bridge sometimes gave me part of their dinner. On this I lived and was comparatively happy. It was a little novel, however, to see a man in rags directing gentlemanly-looking head carpenters. The bridge triumphed, and the cost was $800, and was the greatest hit ever made in London. The money made by it was astonishingly great; thousands and tens of thousands crossing it, and paying toll, besides being the great attraction to the Gardens. Not a publication in London but what has written largely upon it. Although I have never received a penny nor never will, for building the bridge, I have no fault to find with Mr. Tyler, the proprietor, for he has done all fully that he promised to do—that was, to call it 'Remington's Bridge.' Soon after it was built, I have frequently seen hundreds of men looking at the large picture of the bridge at the corners of the streets and envying Remington, when I have stood unknown in the crowd, literally starving. However, the great success of the bridge gave me some credit with a tailor. I got a suit of clothes and some shirts. Any shirt was great, but a clean shirt—Oh! God! what a luxury! Thousands of cards were left for me at the Gardens, and men came to see the bridge from all parts of the kingdom. But with all my due-bills in the hands of the hell-born Jews, of course I had to slope, and came down to Stafford.

I first built the mill, which is the most popular patent ever taken in England. The coffee pot, and many other small patents, take exceedingly well. The drainage of Tixall Meadows is the greatest triumph I have yet had in England. The carriage bridge for Earl Talbot is a most majestic and wonderfully beautiful thing. Dukes, marquises, earls, lords, etc, and their ladies, are coming to see it from all parts. I have now more orders for bridges from the aristocracy than I can execute in ten years, if I would do them. Indeed I have been so much among the aristocracy of late, that what, with high living, being so sudden a transition from starving, I have been compelled to go through a course of medicine, and am just now convalescent. Of course, any thing once built precludes the possibility of taking a patent in England, but its merits and value are beyond calculation. A permanent, beautiful and steady bridge may be thrown across a river half a mile wide, out of the reach of floods, and without any thing touching the water, at a most inconsiderable expense. The American patent is well secured at home, I know. I shall continue to build a few more bridges of larger and larger spans, and one of them a railroad bridge, in order that I may perfect myself in them so as to commence fair when I reach America. I have a great many more accounts of my exploits since I came to Stafford, but must defer sending them until next time. I beg you will write me, for now, since a correspondence is opened, I shall be able to tell you something about England. I know it well. I have dined with earls, and from that down—down—down to where the knives, forks, and plates are chained to the table for fear they should be stolen.

I am, my dear sir, your obedient servant,

J. R. REMINGTON.

SETTING OUT IN LIFE. The anxiety of accumulating something for their children, if not enough for their entire support, at least enough to set them well afloat in life, is very common among parents. It is injudicious and arises from parental weakness. Educate your children well, and you have done enough for them; let them take care of themselves, teach them to depend upon their own strength; and this can only be done by putting them upon their own strength; in no other way can they acquire strength. Setting a young man afloat upon the wealth accumulated by his father, is like tying bladders under the arms of a swimmer—or rather one that cannot swim without them; ten chances to one he will loose his bladders, and his sole dependence; and then where is he? Teach him while young, to swim a little with his own strength, and then chuck him into the stream of life to take care of himself without any extraneous helps. Under such circumstances, he will be likely to buffet the waves with far more success.

BRAGGER OUT-BRAGGED.

'Talk about yer darned fast lines,' said a yankee to a cockney, who was so impudent, as, in the natural way of his countrymen, to commence bragging on English railroads, while the couple were progressing at the rate of forty miles per hour on the Birmingham railway. 'Why, mister, this ere road is purty considerable for England, but it wont do for 'Merica. We ride a-straddle of telegraphs there, when we're in a hurry; but when we aint we take the railroad. Now them roads aint slow, as I'll tell you. I was comin from Philadelphia to York, when ses I to a feller sittin by me, 'Who on airth owns this big garden, with white palins round it?'

'I don't see no white palins,' ses he.

'I don't see nothin else,' ses I, 'and a mighty tall fence it is too.'

The feller burst out a larfin. 'Why, you darned fool,' ses he, 'them's the telegraphic posts.' And sure enough, when the engine stopped, I saw them posts a hundred feet apart and we had been going so all-fired fast, they looked for all the world like white palins.'

At this moment the bell rang, as a station signal, before the cockney had fully recovered from Jonathan's last dose.

'What's that bell ringing for?' inquired the latter of his English friend.

'We are approaching D—.'

'Well, them kind o' bell fixins does for these ere slow cars, but we cant use 'em in 'Meriky.'

'Ah! why not?'

'Travel too fast; fact! beat sound, all to smash. We would be smack through a village before the noise of the clapper was in the neighborhood.'

'You don't say!' exclaimed the astonished cockney.

'Fact again, by thunder! Why, I was on the York cars when them ere steam whistles was first tried. May be you've heard of the terrible accident? No! Well, sir, we were going it strong. Harrycanes were nowhere—all natur seemed shakin to pieces—when several miles off something was seed on the track. The whistle was let loose, and she did scream awfully; but it was no manner of use, for after tumbling over a span of smart horses, and a big market wagon, I was just rising from a pond, when along came the whistle's holler, mixed up with some big curses I minded to have heard the engine man rip out, when he first saw the wagon. But the poor fellet was dead when his voice arrived. Fact; got the documents.'

'Extraordinary!' exclaimed the horror-struck cockney, 'and do you use vistles yet?'

'Bless your soul, no. Congress stopped 'em right off, and now we acts on the philosophic principle that light travels an all-fired sight faster than sound, which will do perhaps for this generation. We now tell 'em we are coming by bursting out a light that does astonish animal creation, and I reckon rather surprised the planetary system at first. When it was first tried at night, the roosters on the road commenced crowing, and the chickens all got down from roost, thinking that it was daylight.'

The cars suddenly stopped, when Jonathan, having arrived at the point of his debarkation, looked around at the bewildered cockney, nodded his head, and with a little carpet bag chucked under one arm, and umbrella under the other, took his leave, sober as a deacon.

THE MAIN POINT IN LAW. When John Q. Adams had about finished his law studies with Mr. Parsons of Newburyport, (afterwards Judge Parsons,) he was told by Mr. P. that there was one important thing he had not imparted to him, and which it was very essential indeed that he should know, but which he could not impart to him unless he would pay fifty dollars in advance. Mr. Adams hesitated at first, but finally handed over the money. Mr. Parsons pocketed the fifty dollars, and then said—"This important piece of information is this: the main point in law is good evidence." Mr. Adams discovered no symptoms of chagrin. His features wore that same cold placidity for which they have been so characteristic. He doubtlessly inwardly resolved to make the most of his dear bought information. Time passed on, and the affair was apparently forgotten. Mr. Parsons and Mr. Adams were on terms of intimacy—they were good friends. One day Mr. A. apparently in some haste, met Mr. P. in the street, told him he had got to make out a hundred dollars, and asked if he could lend him that sum for a few days. Mr. Parsons said he could, and let him have the money. No note or writing was given. Days and weeks had passed along, but Mr. Adams had not offered to return the hundred dollars. At last Mr. Parsons met him and asked him if he had forgotten that he borrowed that sum of him, and had not returned it. 'Owe you a hundred dollars!' said Mr. Adams with emphasis, 'have you any proof of it?' 'No,' was the reply. 'Well, Mr. Parsons,' said Mr. Adams, 'you know that the main point in law is good evidence.' The hundred dollars was never again called for.

KISSES. The following are the different varieties as given in a fashionable journal, together with the authorities for the same, from scripture, appended:—Salutation, Samuel xx, 41. Valediction, Ruth i, 9. Reconciliation, 2 Samuel xiv, 33. Subjection, Psalms ii, 12. Approbation, Proverbs ii, 12. Adoration, 1 Kings xix, 18. Treachery, Matthew xxvi, 49. Affection, Genesis xiv, 15.

THE LUXURY OF THE ROMAN TABLE. The luxury of the table commenced about the period of the battle of Actium, and continued till the reign of Galba. Their delicacies consisted of peacocks, cranes of Malta, nightingales, venison, and wild and tame fowls; they were also fond of fish. The reigning taste was for a profusion of provisions; whole wild boars were served up, filled with various small animals and birds of different kinds. This dish was called the Trojan horse in allusion to the horse filled with soldiers. Fowls and game of all sorts were served up in pyramids, piled up in dishes as broad as moderate tables. Mark Anthony provided eight boars for twelve guests. Caligula served up to his guests pearls of great value, dissolved in vinegar. Lucullus had a particular name for each apartment, and a certain scale of expense attached to each. Cicero and Pompey agreed to take supper with him, provided he would not order his servants to prepare any thing extraordinary. He directed the servants to prepare the supper in the room of Apollo. His friends were surprised at the magnificence of the entertainment. He then informed them, that when he mentioned the name of the room, his servants knew the scale of expense. Whenever he supped in the room of Apollo, the supper always cost £1,250. He was equally sumptuous in his dress. A Roman Prætor, who was to give games to the public, requested to borrow one hundred purple robes for the actors. Lucullus replied, that he could lend him two hundred if he wanted them. The Roman furniture in their houses corresponded with their profuseness in other respects. Pliny states, that in his time more money was often given for a table, than the amount of all the treasures found in Carthage when it was conquered by the Romans.—Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

SUBLIME MATHEMATICAL CALCULATIONS.—What a noisy creature would a man be were his voice in proportion to his weight, as loud as that of a locust! A locust can be heard at the distance of one-sixteenth of a mile. The golden wren is said to weigh but half and ounce; so that a middling sized man would weigh down not short of four thousand of them; and it must be strange if a golden wren would not outweigh four of our locusts. Supposing therefore, that a common man weighs as much as sixteen thousand of our locusts, and that the note of a locust can be heard one-sixteenth of a mile, a man of common dimensions, pretty round in wind and limb, ought to be able to make himself distinctly heard at the distance of sixteen hundred miles; and when he sneezed, 'his house ought to fall about his ears!'

Supposing a flea to weigh one grain, which is more than its actual weight, and to jump one and a half yards, a common man of one hundred and fifty pounds, with jumping powers in proportion, could jump twelve thousand eight hundred miles, or about the distance from New York to Cochin China. Aristophnes represents Socrates and his disciples, as deeply engaged in calculations of this kind, around a table on which they are waxing a flea's legs to see what weight it will carry in proportion to its size, but he does not announce the result of their experiments. We are therefore happy in being able to supply, in some degree, so serious an omission.

THE DYING MAN. It is a very terrible and amazing thing to see a man die, and solemnly take his last leave of the world. The very circumstances of dying men are apt to strike us with horror. To hear such a man, how sensibly he will speak of the other world, as if he were just come from it, rather than going to it; how severely he will condemn himself for the folly and wickedness of his life; with what passion he will wish that he had lived better, and served God more sincerely; how seriously he will resolve upon a better life, if God would be pleased to raise him up, and try him once more; with what zeal and earnestness he will commend to his best friends and nearest relations a religious and virtuous course of life as the only thing that will minister comfort to them when they come to be in his condition. Such discourses as these are very apt to move and affect men for the time, and to stir up in them very good resolutions, whilst the present fit and impression lasts; but because these sights are very frequent, they have seldom any great permanent effect upon men. They consider that it is a very common case, and sinners take example and encouragement from one another; every one is affected for the present, few are so effectually convinced as to betake themselves to a better course.

INFLUENCE OF WOMAN. Marryatt, in his popular Stories of the Sea, says—'Man is but a rough pebble without the attrition received from contact with the other sex; it is wonderful how the ladies pumice a man down into a smoothness which occasions him to roll over and over with the rest of his species, jostling, but not wounding his neighbors, as the waves of circumstances bring him into collision with them.'

CHURCH CHOIRS. These little communities may well be compared to bee-hives—once properly ordered and then undisturbed, their several members do their work diligently, quietly and successfully; but agitate them in any way, and there exists not a living person or company of persons more irritable and impossible to manage.

FACTS FOR WINE AND BEER DRINKERS. Mr. John C. Clure gave an interesting and powerful lecture on the demoralizing effects of wine and beer, recently, in Boston. He proved by chemical analysis, made in the presence of his audience, that the common wine and beer consumed in this city are composed of the most poisonous ingredients. He exhibited a pint of Strong Beer, purchased at the 'Family Grocery' of one Mr. Leonard at the west part of the city, and pouring a wine glass full of this into one of his analyzing vessels, soon extracted therefrom about two table spoons full of alcohol; to this he applied a lighted lamp, and the liquid flashed into a blue flame! The beer contained a quantity of cocculus indicus and other deadly drugs. Mr. Clure also analyzed a variety of wines and discovered that they were composed of logwood, sugar of lead, etc. Some of Whitwell's Temperance Bitters were handed Mr. C. for chemical test; he complied with the request made, and soon produced a quantity of alcohol that burned blue as indigo. It is to be hoped that Mr. Clure will be called upon to give a series of lectures on these important subjects. We are glad that he intend, devoting his attention to this branch of Reforms, says the Boston Chronotype.

OUR CHILDREN ARE NOT TAUGHT TO THINK ENOUGH. Study, and the means of study, are indispensable; but all study and no reflection will never make a scholar. A man may read a monument of books, and never know the more; because, knowing but little of all, he knows nothing definite of a part. So with the children. They should obtain the faculty of reflection. Moderate study, and rigid, scrutinizing, untiring thought, will bring a child any sufficient knowledge. Who is the successful man? He who thinks. Who is the distinguished professional man? He who reflects and investigates. And who the enviable scholar—the book worm? Ask Newton with his apple, Watt with his engine, or Franklin and Morse with the kite and lightning, and they will tell you, as all history portrays, that knowledge comes only after close vigilant thought—and show me that boy who is reserved, thoughtful and inquisitive, and when he comes to manhood, I will point out to you an intellect; or the girl who sees beauty in nature, and admires nature for its beauty and instructions, and I will show you a store of intellectual brightness.

RECOVERED LAKE. A singular incident occurred on the Michigan Central Railway. It became necessary to carry a grading or embankment of fifteen feet high, across a low piece of ground, containing about one hundred acres, nearly dry enough for plow land. When they had progressed with the grading for some distance, it became too heavy for the soil to support, the crusts of the earth broke in, and the embankment sunk down into seventy nine feet of water! It appears that the piece of ground had been a lake, but had collected a soil of roots, peat, muck, etc, on its surface, apparently from ten to fifteen feet thick, which had become hardened and dry enough for farm purposes. It is thought it would have supported an embankment of five feet in thickness, and that if it had not become necessary for them to have one much higher, it would have supported the road, and the fact might never have been discovered that it had rested on the bosom of a lake.

A FACT. The ready wit of a true-born Irishman, however humble, is exceeded only by his gallantry. A few days since, says an exchange paper, we observed a case in point. A sudden gust of wind took a parasol from the hand of its owner, and before ane had a chance to recollect whether it would be his etiquette to catch the parasol of a lady to whom he had never before been introduced, a lively Emerald-er dropped his hod of bricks, caught the parachute in the midst of its Ellsler gyrations, and presented it to the loser with a low bow, which remined us of poor Power. 'Faith, madam,' said he, as he did so, 'if you were as strong as you are handsome, it wouldn't have got away from you.' 'Which shall I thank you for first, the service or the compliment?' asked the lady smilingly. 'Troth, madam,' said Pat, again touching the place where once stood the brim of what was a beaver, 'that look of your beautiful eye thanked me for both.'

A JOLLY LIFE. Insect generally must lead a truly jovial life. Think what it must be to lodge in a lily. Imagine a palace of ivory or pearl, with pillars of silver and capitals of gold all exhaling such a perfume as never arose from human censer. Fancy, again the fun of tucking yourself up for the night in the folds of a rose, rocked to sleep by the gentle sighs of summer air, nothing to do when you awake, but to wash yourself in a dew drop, and fall to and eat your bedclothes!

A BEAUTY. As Lady Elizabeth passed the line of persons seated and standing in thick array, there was heard an involuntory murmur of 'How gloriously handsome she is!' Who that understands woman's beauty, does not know that even a handsome woman is at times twice as handsome as she is at others? Who that is herself endowed with the gift of beauty has not experienced this, and occasionally felt embued with a more than usual power of captivation.

A HARD KICK. There is an attorney practicing in our courts, who has attained a great notoriety, among numerous other things, for bullying witnesses on the opposing side of cases wherein he is concerned. As it would not be polite to give his full name right out to the crowd, we will merely call him 'Wyke,' for short.

There was a horse case, a very common case upon our magistrates' dockets, trying before Esquire Snellbiker, one day, in which Wyke happened to be 'ferment' the horse. A slow and easy witness had been called to the stand by the plaintiff, who, in a plain, straight forward manner, made the other side of the case look rather blue. The plaintiff's attorney being through, Wyke commenced a regular cross-examination, which was cut short in the following manner:

'Well, what do you know about a horse? Are you a horse doctor?' said the barbarian, in his peculiar, contemptuous, and overbearing manner.

'No, I don't pretend to be a horse doctor, but I know a good deal about the nater of the beast.'

'That means to say that you know a horse from a jackass when you see them,' said Wyke, in the same style, looking knowingly at the court, and glancing triumphantly around at the crowd of spectators, with a telegraphic expression, which said, 'Now I've got him on the hip.'

The intended victim, gazing intently at his legal tormentor, drawled out:

'Oh, ye-as; jes so; I'd never take you for a horse.'

THE FOURTH OF MARCH. Rule for determining on what day of the week the fourth of March occurs.

Divide the year by 4, neglecting the remainder, and add the quotient to the year; divide this sum by 7, and the remainder will indicate the required day, counting the Sabbath 1, Monday 2, &c. If there be no remainder the day is Saturday.

Example: Required the day of the week on which the 4th of March fell in 1845?

Solution: 1845 divided by 4, gives 461, which, added to 1845, gives 2306; now divide this by 7, and we have 329, with the remainder 3; the required day was therefore Tuesday. This rule is good for any year, from 1800 to 1900; thus in 1802 it fell on Thursday, in 1870 it will fall on Friday, &c.

FIRST SNOW IN BOSTON. In 1845, the first snow, 1 1-2 inch, fell on Nov. 30.

In 1846, 1-4 inch of hail, mixed with a little snow, fell on Oct. 28th, and two inches of snow on Nov. 25.

In 1847, a few flakes fell on Nov. 20th, but the ground was not whitened with snow, until Dec. 17th, when about one half inch, mixed with hail, fell.

In 1848, the first snow, about 1-6 of an inch, fell on Nov. 9th; it also fell on two or three hours on Sunday Nov. 12th, which melted as they fell. Nov. 20th, three or four inches of wet and drifted snow.

INCREASE OF VOTES. The popular vote since 1828, for President, has been as follows:

Years.	Voters.
1828,	1,162,418
1832,	1,252,298
1836,	1,501,298
1840,	2,402,658
1844,	2,773,549

SPONGE DIVING. In the Cyclades, the male inhabitants are chiefly brought up to the business of sponge diving: no young man is allowed to marry until he can descend with facility to the depth of twenty fathoms in the sea.

WIT. A professed wit musters his jokes on parade every morning as a general does his veterans, to ascertain how many have been disabled by length of service.

MUSCLES IN THE CATERPILLAR. In Burmeister's Manual of Entomology we are told that the number of muscles in the caterpillar amounts to upwards of four thousand; according to Lyonnet, the number found in the head is 220, those of the body are 1647, and those of the internal organs make 2186, giving a total of 4061!

Dr. Doddridge once asked his little daughter, nearly six years old, what made every body love her? She replied, 'I don't know indeed, papa, unless it is because I love every body.'

One of the political paper quotes a sentence from Junius, thus: 'In a question merely political, an honest man may stand neuter.' The editor probably has reference to gender.

In South Braintree, recently, a watch, a gun, silver spoons and mince pies were stolen from Warren Mansfield's house—the thief having first broken into the railroad depot, but without obtaining any plunder.

Capt. John H. Barry, who commanded a company of the Massachusetts Volunteers, died recently in Boston.

The King of Denmark has directed the Comet medal, founded by one of his predecessors, to be awarded to Miss Maria Mitchell of Nantucket, for her discovery of the telescopic comet of the 1st of October, 1847.

The Portsmouth, Saco and Portland Railroad Company have declared a semi-annual dividend of three dollars per share.

Riches and poverty depend on our desires rather than our pocket books. He that gets ten thousand a year, and spends fifteen is considered rich, and yet he is not half so much so as the poor devil who works for a dollar a day, and spends six shillings.

An American in Brazil has applied to the government for an exclusive grant to navigate the river amazon by steam.

Blessed are they that expect nothing, for they shall not be disappointed.

A regiment of mounted riflemen is being enlisted in Misouri and Ohio, for service in Oregon, and will cross the Prairies early next spring.

Blessed are they that are afraid of thunder, for they shall hesitate about getting married and keep away from political meetings.

The amount of wine made this year, in the neighborhood of Hermann, Ohio, is about six thousand gallons.

The democrats of Boston have nominated John W. James, Esq., for Mayor.

From the 1st of January, 1849, the port of Manilla is to be free to all whalers.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, DEC 2, 1848.

John A. Green, Editor.

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. The second track between Boston and South Braintree, on the Old Colony Railroad, is nearly completed, and will probably be opened soon to the latter place.

The Mount Hope Branch, which is to be used for bringing gravel to grade the neck lands of Boston, and for the transportation of the city offal in air-tight tanks from the stables to Mount Hope, is opened. It bids fair to make the Old Colony Railroad an annual return greater than its cost. About one thousand tons of gravel are daily brought to the city from Mount Hope.

STOREBREAKING. The store of Messrs. Abercrombie & Bent, in this town, was broken into on Tuesday night, and robbed of a quantity of pantaloons and boots. The thief or thieves evidently got alarmed in some way, and decamped with but little plunder.

AN UNLUCKY LETTER. A South Carolina paper calls attention to the fact that some paragraphist, twenty years ago, predicted that no man, whose name began with C, would ever be President of the United States. It really seems that there is no luck in the letter C in connection with the Presidency. Dewit Clinton tried it, and was defeated; Crawford tried it, and was defeated; Clay has tried it with every prospect of success, and has been unaccountably defeated. Calhoun has tried it on every track, and has been defeated.

RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT EVERETT. Hon. Edward Everett has resigned the Presidency of Harvard College. In the course of the first year after entering upon the office, he found his health seriously impaired. In the spring of 1847, he communicated to his associates in the government of the University his serious apprehensions that the confinement, labor, and anxiety incident to the situation would prove beyond his strength. These fears were fully realized, in the course of the ensuing twelvemonth.

FOREIGN. The Cambria arrived at New York on Saturday, bringing European news seven days later. Business matters have improved in England In Ireland the state trials are progressing—but little of interest has transpired. Matters in France remain about the same. The election of President is the topic of interest at present. The two prominent candidates are General Cavaignac and Prince Louis Napoleon. Italy seems to be in a general state of armed resistance to Austria. From Austria, we have news of the capitulation of Vienna to the troops of the Emperor, and the defeat of the Hungarians, who are attempting to secure a government independent of that of Austria.

A NEGRO VILLAGE. An attempt is being made by a number of colored men in various places to establish a village, composed exclusively of people of color, in Florence, Oneida county, New York. There are in Florence, it is said, water privileges for saw mills and indeed every thing necessary for a settlement.

MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE. In a convention of the two branches of the Legislature, the whig candidates for Electors of President and Vice President were elected by a majority of ninety-three votes. There were 196 votes for the Taylor Electors, 63 for Cass, 37 for Van Buren, and one for a ticket distinct from all others.

GREAT FOLLY. T. P. Barnum, proprietor of the American Museum in New York, who has accumulated an immense fortune within a few years past, has just completed a splendid villa or country seat, at Bridgeport, Conn., which he calls Iranistan. It is said to have cost, with its furnishing, $150,000. On Tuesday night last the elegant and gorgeously furnished apartments, about fifty in number, were thrown open for a public entertainment, which was attended by over one thousand of the principal people of Bridgeport, and by gentlemen from New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. The expense of the feast was $2700 Two bands of music from New York were present. A splendid supper was served at 11 o'clock, and dancing was kept up until three. In one of the rooms was a service of gold plate, purchased by Mr. B. from the effects of a Russian Prince; and in another was a service of silver and Sevres ware.

PANORAMA OF MEXICO. We learn that Donovan's Panorama of Mexico now exhibiting at Boylston Hall, Boston, is soon to be moved to Europe, if you would see it go soon.

There are 778 banks in the Union, with a capital of $210,000,000. Circulation about $125,000,000. Specie $50,000,000.

In the Court of Common Pleas, Greenfield, (Mass.) Ashbel Dickinson, of Brattleboro', (Vt.) has recovered one hundred and fourteen dollars of D. D. Winchester & Son, of the Exchange hotel, in Springfield, for a lost trunk. The trunk was entrusted to a hackman in the employ of the defendants, and was either lost or stolen from the carriage on its way to the hotel.

Rev. John Nichols, formerly pastor of the Universalist Society in this town, has been chosen a Representative to General Court from Hollistor.

The largest scythe manufactory in the world is located at Wayne, Maine, about sixteen miles from Augusta. Twelve thousand dozen scythes are annually manufactured, to produce which are required 100 men, 450,000 lbs. iron, 65,000 lbs. steel, 12,000 tons hard-coal, 20,000 bushels charcoal, 100 tons grindstones, and half a ton of borax. This last article is used in the process of welding.

A memorial is in circulation in New York, praying the city authorities to enforce the laws prohibiting the sale of ale, porter, strong or spirituous liquors on Sunday.

Ten thousand hogs have been cut up into sausages within a year, at Cincinnati. They weighed two million pounds.

The slave trade is as brisk as ever, and some of the nautical men recently examined by the British committee on this subject, give the opinion that no amount of naval force will extirpate it.

The amount of work done by machinery, moved by steam, in England, is equal to that of more than 3,000,000 of able bodied men by direct manual labor.

Hon. Nathan H. Clifford, United States Minister to Mexico, is at present stopping in New York city. He is on his way to Maine, but will return in season to reach Mexico by the 1st of January next.

Congress assembles next Monday. The members are already on their way. The message of the President will probably be sent in to both houses on Tuesday.

The house of Dea. Ephraim Wales, of Randolph, was broken open on Sunday while the family were at church, and his desk rifled of its contents, mainly notes and certificates of stock in the Fall River Railroad and Randolph Bank.

It is really astonishing to see what wonderful cures are performed by the use of the Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters.

[Extract of a letter from Dr. Williams of Vt.]

Gentlemen—I will thank you to send me two dozen more of your Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters. I have used it with great success in four cases of dyspepsia, curing each of them in an almost incredible short time; likewise one case of scrofulous humor and one of jaundice. I consider it a valuable compound, and must say I have used it with the happiest effects. Should like to have it as soon as convenient. One of the cases of dyspepsia was a gentleman who had suffered a long time, and had been to the Springs for two seasons.

A. Borden, Esq. of Cambridge, cured of the dyspepsia of a year standing, after trying a hundred remedies without the least effect.

For sale in Quincy by Mrs. E. HAYDEN and CHARLES CLAPP; Braintree, Oliver Perkins; South Braintree, J. Stoddard & Co. Sold also by agents generally. 2w Nov. 25.

REMEDY FOR BRONCHITIS.

Boston, May 25th, 1847.

Mr. Seth W. Fowle,

DEAR SIR:—There are so many quack medicines at the present time, and each one has more or less certificates from real or imaginary individuals, that I have for some time had doubts of the propriety of giving any testimony in favor of your medicine. But being assured that it have been benefitted by its use, and feeling satisfied that by giving in my testimony in regard to its medicinal qualities, I may, perhaps, be the means of saving some one similarly afflicted, I therefore cheerfully add my testimony in favor of the medicine that I know has done me great good. I have been afflicted with the Bronchitis for a number of years, and by the use of a couple of bottles of

WISTER'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY,

I am happy to say that I am almost free from the above troublesome disease.

If this should be the means of saving even one of my fellow beings from that most troublesome and painful disease, (Bronchitis) I shall be fully paid for my trouble in writing the above communication.

Respectfully yours,
B COVERT, Vocalist,
Firm of Covert & Dodge.

We take pleasure in transferring the above certificate of Mr. Covert, in favor of the curative properties of Wister's Balsam of Wild Cherry, to our columns. Mr Covert (of the firm of Covert & Dodge, Vocalists) has been long and favorably known in this city and vicinity as a vocalist of rare attainments. We have watched with painful anxiety his declining health from the disease of which he speaks, and have almost despaired of his recovery; yes, we placed him in the catalogue of incurables; but thanks to the virtues of Dr. Wister's Balsam, he is now, greatly to our surprise, enjoying most excellent health. [New England Washingtonian, Boston.

There's no mistake about it.

What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.

A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.

Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it:
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.

RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

The Boston Almanac for 1849,

BY S. N. DICKINSON,

WILL be publised about the 1st of December. It will be printed upon new type, and contain more pages than any previous number. Beautifully bound in cloth, and gilt. It will contain

A new and accurate MAP of the vicinity of Boston, embracing a distance of 15 or 20 miles around the city. Long Pond, and the whole line of the Aqueduct are delineated upon it. The outside towns on the Map, are Hull, Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth, Braintree, Canton, Dedham, Medford, Sherburne, Framingham, Sudbury, Concord, Acton, Carlisle, Billerica, Wilmington, Danvers, Beverly and Marblehead. All the Islands in the harbor are set down. The Watering Places—Phillips Beach, Nahant Bay and Beach, Nahant, Chelsea Beach, etc.

An improved set of CALENDAR PAGES, calculated by Prof. Pierce, of Cambridge. The calendar pages are accompanied by a short description of the appearance of the Heavens on the 15th of each month. Opposite to each calender page there is a blank leaf for memorandums, containing a blank line and date for every day in the month. These MEMORANDA PAGES are of great convenience to an individual, or for the use of a family, in making memorandums from day to day

The BUSINESS DIRECTORY of the city of Boston, corrected and enlarged. This Directory exhibits all trades, business and professions under their appropriate heads; that is, under the head Apothecaries, will be found the names of all persons engaged in that business; under the head of Bakers, the names and places of all engaged in that business, and so on to the end of the alphabet. This document is one of great usefulness to the citizen, and of still greater importence to persons in the country, as here they have laid before them the key to the whole business population of the metropolis. It occupies about 80 closely printed pages of the Almanac.

An interesting historical account of the PUBLIC SCHOOLS of Boston. This article has been prepared with great care and much research, by Isaac F. Shepard, Esq., Principal of the Otis School. It embraces the subject from that period of time when public schools were first thought of by our forefathers, and traces it up, in its growth, from that time to the present. It is deeply interesting, and occupies 36 pages of the Almanac. An ENGRAVED VIEW of each of the Public Schools is given, and two views of Model Primary Schools, which have been erected within the past year or two.

Some account of a WINTER PASSED IN FLORIDA, by an invalid, in hopes of being restored to health. His experience given, which may be of great convenience to those intending to visit that region for a similar purpose. Accompanying this article, the writer has prepared a set of WEATHER TABLES, showing the temperature in Jacksonville, Florida, and Boston, for one year. To the curious in such matters, it is thought these tables will be very interesting.

A Table of the 772 Streets, Places and Alleys in the city of Boston, giving the beginning and terminus of each street, and the location of the places and alleys. With this table the stranger can find any street in the city.

A list of 227 EXPRESSES that leave Boston daily, semi-weekly and weekly.

A list of the RAIL-ROADS diverging from Boston, and a list of the Branch Roads running from the Boston Roads.

These are the principal features of the Boston Almanac for 1849. But it embraces a great variety of other matters, useful and entertaining to the reader.

This Almanac contains TWO HUNDRED and TWENTY closely printed pages. The quantity of matter is greater than that found in an ordinary 8vo. of 500 pages. The octavo volume would sell for two or three dollars. For the Almanac, the price is only TWENTY FIVE CENTS, per single copy. By wholesale, a very liberal discount is made.

Orders sent to Messrs B B MUSSEY & Co., 29 Cornhill, and to Mr. THOMAS GROOM, 82 State Street, Publishers, will meet with immediate attention. 3w Boston, Nov. 18.

Encourage your Own.

To the People of Quincy—

THE following is a well known motto, and strictly true:

"That County or Town that gives the most liberal encouragement to its own manufactures of every kind is well known to thrive, and increase in wealth and population."

There are a few interesting facts, of which we wish to remind you, and which we are inclined to think have slipped from the memory of some, and which it will be for your advantage as well as ours to remember.

1st. That at the QUINCY BOOKSTORE you will find all the

in use in this and the neighboring towns.

2d. That at the same place you will find every kind of

Blank Account Book,

RECORD or MEMORANDUM BOOK.

3d. That there you will find a great assortment of

Miscellaneous, Juvenile and Toy Books.

4th. That there you will find all kinds of

STATIONERY.

5th. That there you will find an innumerable variety of

FANCY GOODS.

6th That all the above will be sold at the very

Lowest Market Prices.

7th. That we are entirely disinterested when we say that you will be much better satisfied with yourselves and your bargains if you trade at home, in preference to "out of town."

8th. That there you will find a GOOD LIBRARY where you can procure reading on reasonable terms.

9th. That the Proprietors are agents for all the popular MAGAZINES, receiving the subscriptions themselves and furnishing the numbers on their own responsibility, free of any expense. Many have forgotten this of late, preferring to subscribe of some travelling agent, to one in their own town.

10th That they RE-BIND old Books, Pamphlets, Periodicals, Music, etc, "as cheap as they can afford to and as quick as anybody."

These things we wish to call to your memory, because while we have been moving on in a quiet kind of a way, you seem partly to have forgotten the old place, thinking perhaps that we did not keep up with the times in the variety of our goods and also in prices. Our rule, like that of many others, is, "quick sales and small profits," therefore call in and we will supply you most satisfactorily.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

THE OLD GANDER'S PETITION.

Ye sons of Freedom, hail! hallo!
You love your friends and if a foe
Dares to approach, full well you know
The rifle true to aim.

In peace you lay the rifle by,
Or at the passing goose let fly,—
The goose who with his freedom cry,
Preserv'd the Roman name.

In ancient times the goose passed on,
Or north or south his journey won,
He dreaded not the forest's son,
His arrow and his bow.

But now he takes his wary flight
At cautious height, or else by night
He mocks the careful rifler's sight,
And soars to freedom now.

In ancient days he passed your shore
To mountain lakes where cataracts roar,
And but the prowling savage saw,
And the uncultured waste.

Now freedom's swarming hive he sees,
Sees wide wing'd wonders crowd your seas,
Hears Independence on the breeze,—
Let him too freedom taste.

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

By Request.

ON THE DEATH OF AN INFANT.

BY REV. LEGH RICHMOND.

Hark! how the angels, as they fly,
Sing through the regions of the sky;
Bearing an infant in their arms,
Securely freed from sin's alarms

Welcome, dear babe, to Jesus's breast,
For ever there in joy to rest!
Welcome to Jesus's courts above,
To sing thy great Redeemer's love!

We left the heavens and flew to earth,
To watch thee at thy mortal birth;
Obedient to thy Savior's will,
We stayed to love and guard thee still!

We, thy protecting angels, came
To see thee blessed in Jesus's name;
When the baptismal seal was given,
To mark thee, child, an heir of heaven.

When the resistless call of death
Bade thee resign thy infant breath;
When parents wept, and thou didst smile,
We were thy guardians all the while.

Now with the lightning's speed we bear
The child committed to our care;
With anthems such as angels sing,
We fly to bear thee to our King.

Thus sweetly borne, he flies to rest;
We know 'tis well—nay more, 'tis best;
When we our pilgrim's path have trod,
O may we find him with our God!

WINTER IS COMING.

Winter is coming! the birds have flown
Away to a sunnier clime;
The Autumn wind, as it waileth by,
To the thoughtful bringeth a sigh,
As it lists to the mournful chime,
Winter is coming!

Winter is coming! the urchin gay
Looks forward with hope and with joy,
To the snowy hills and the frozen streams—
E'en while he sleepeth, the thought still gleams
Through the mind of the happy boy,
Winter is coming!

Winter is coming! the maiden fair,
With a heart all merry and gay,
Remembers the balls—the play—the rout—
Remembers the gay sleigh party's shout—
And sings through the live-long day
Winter is coming!

Winter is coming! the houseless poor,
With a feeling of awful dread,
Behold his approach with sighs and tears—
His coming, to them, awaketh fears
That, perchance, they may want for bread:
Winter is coming!

Winter is coming! to all—to all—
With his chilly and freezing breath;
To the urchin gay, the maiden fair—
To the houseless poor—Oh! then prepare
For the cold, cold winter of death!
Winter is coming!

ANECDOTES.

'John, parse 'girls are lovely.' '

'Girls is a common noun, third person, plural number, and objectiva case.'

'Objective case?'

'No, nominative case.'

'Nominative to what verb?'

'I don't know, sir.'

'Well, what follows girls?'

'John Dickson followed our gals, what we've got to hum, last Sunday afternoon.'

'Oh, young man! Well, I suppose they were in the objective case?'

No, sir-ee! When I seed 'em I should think they were in the possessive case, for he was huggin' 'em like thunder!'

The Duke of Cumberland once invited himself to dine with Foote, on his arrival, finding the house very small, observed, 'Why, Foote, this room is not fit to swing a cat in.' Foote replied—'May it please your Royal Highness, I never swing cats!'

A mincing young lady who had just finished her education, informed her granny that she intended learning how to dance the Crack-o-wane—(Cracovienne.) 'Now don't, Araminta,' said the anxious relative, you know how bad we'd feel, if you was to burst a blood-vessel.'

The Globe:

A Congressional, Agricultural and Literary Newspaper.

THE Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur; and a Congressional Globe periodically, as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source that may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in scientific and practical works on agriculture. For material, the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects, will be consulted, and, it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Globe, as a newspaper, and as a vehicle of information and amusement in other respects, will be under the charge of Francis P. Blair and James C. Pickett. The Congressional department and business concerns of the paper will be under the management of John C. Rives. The public are familiar with Blair and Rives connected with the press. In introducing Mr Pickett as one of the concern, they will be allowed to say a few words of him. He is a gentleman favorably known to the Government, for the talent and judgment which distinguished his diplomatic service while connected with the mission to Quito; and more recently when Charge d'Affaires to Peru. From his pen mainly the Globe will derive the selections and translations from the French journals and periodicals, the comments on them, and the other literary articles, which will be found among its chief attractions.

The Globe will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the balance of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a Weekly Globe, a Congressional Globe, and an Appendix.

The Weekly Globe will be the vehicle of the miscellaneous articles of the daily print, with a synopsis of the Congressional proceedings.

The Congressional Globe will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States, and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and Appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue. The Editors of the Globe have borne their share in the party conflicts of the press. They claim an honorable discharge from the vocation. The Globe will inviolably maintain the neutrality which its relation to Congress imposes.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year, - - - - - $5 00
For one copy of the Weekly Globe one year, 2 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of January, - - - - 1 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of Jan. 1 00
For six copies of either the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, or part of both, - 5 00

The subscription for the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, after the 1st of January, will be $1 50. The original price of one dollar does not pay the expense of the publications in consequence of the great increase of matter published.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore no person need consume time in ordering them, unless the subscription price accompanies the order.

Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all

Diseases of the Blood,

such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated
Dandelion Panacea,
an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibilious remedy on record.

Oleum Jecoris Aselli,
Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,
For Coughs, Bronchetis, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.

The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

EMERY SOUTHER, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, corner of Green Street and Lyman Place.

NORFOLK COUNTY
Health Insurance Company.

Capital $50,000.

Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A. S DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed; young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled. MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—

From the age of fifteen to forty five years:

Paying $3	a year,	draw	$2	weekly.

The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No. 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES.

Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc, etc, yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.

The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.

THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.

The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.

The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.

The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

MISCELLANY.

THE PILGRIMAGE OF YOUTH.

AN ALLEGORY.

I found myself, in the fulness of youth, abroad upon a journey, of which I could not see the end, and did not know the motives; the scene was, at first, enchanting. Every thing around promised both security and delight. A thousand sylvan paths courted my steps—each so alluring that I scarcely knew or cared which I followed. They were all sought by the hundreds around, who were eagerly pressing on their way. These, I soon perceived, were divided into two classes: the one called mortals—the other, deities—to whom the wafarers attached themselves according to their pleasure, and from whose superior nature they expected not only aid, but reward.

Of these divinities, there was one so attractive in her person, that I resolved to solicit her influence. The nearer I approached her, the more lovely she appeared; and by the anxiety discovered by all to procure her favor, it was clear that her acquaintance must be very desirable. She was indeed a beautiful nymph, and not at all unwilling to smile on her adorers—among the foremost of whom I soon found myself. Still, as she smiled, her glances grew more and more bewitching, till I perceived that under their spell, I was gradually yielding to giddy intoxication, and had, at length, lost all power of proceeding. The name of this nymph whom all followed, and by whom all were destroyed, was Pleasure. I immediately discovered that she was but a dangerous enchanter in disguise, who in seeking followers, sought only victims.

Eager to escape her snares, I threw myself into the train of a power widely different. It was a man, stern, haughty and irresistible, who despised Pleasure and her effeminate disciples, and never pursued the same tempting paths, but rather penetrated into repulsive and gloomy solitudes, and mounted, or strove to mount, inaccessible crags. There was something in the severity and stoicism of this leader that immediately fired my fancy, and I became eager to imitate his proud career, but I soon found that he led me not only so far away from the multitude as to oppress me with a painful sense of loneliness, but I was often betrayed into sudden dilemmas and dangers, from which I could be extricated only by the perpetration of deeds foreign to my nature. I inquired the name of this divinity, and my chance informant replied—

'Oh, fortunate youth, to have appealed to me before it was too late. You have had a pretty escape. The fellow is the ruiner of millions! Did you undertake to follow him, without examining whither he would lead you?'

'Indeed,' said I, 'to confess the truth, I gave myself little trouble about the matter. I had nearly fallen a victim to the seducing wiles of Pleasure; and in my anxiety to escape her, I ran into the rocks of the new comer. Pray what is his name?'

'You are like all the rest of the young,' remarked my new cicrone, coldly. 'His name is Ambition. You are now a tolerable happy and well meaning person, but he would have converted you into a hardened scoundrel before you could be conscions of any transformation.'

'And pray, my good woman,' asked I, beginning to grow somewhat particular in the choice of my friends after the two last mishaps, 'what may be your name?'

She was a tall, grave looking, severe maiden, well advanced in years, with a thin countenance, a quick, threatening eye, lips half hidden by their compression, and a long finger, which she extended with an imperative air as she spoke. She put me in mind of my school mistress.

She was a tall, grave looking, severe maiden, well advanced in years, with a thin countenance, a quick, threatening eye, lips half hidden by their compression, and a long finger, which she extended with an imperative air as she spoke. She put me in mind of my school mistress.

'Sir,' said she, with a stately toss of the head, 'my name is Reason.'

'Madam,' answered I, respectfully, laying my hand upon my heart, 'your most obedient. I am delighted to meet with you, for your name and excellent character are well known to me.'

'Sir,' said Reason, although she blushed a little, and could not prevent her rigid features from softening into something like an expression of gratification, 'no flattery; there is nothing I so much abhor.'

'But, madam,' said I, with another bow, 'I must speak as I feel.'

'Ah,' said Rnason, 'that indeed!'

'And now, my honored mistress,' continued I, 'pray tell me a little about this scene and the path I am to pursue. To be plain to you, I am an ignorant young fellow and totally unacquainted with the world.'

'So much the better,' said my guide, 'ignorance is a great deal better than prejudice. I never find difficulty with your ignorant people. It is your knowing ones that give me all the trouble. I can never get them to listen to me in the first place.'

'How strange!'

'Or when they do, it is only to contradict me.'

'How rude!'

'Or, when they do not contradict me, they do not retain my lessons in their minds more than an instant after I cease to speak.'

'Believe me, my dear madam,' said I, 'you will find me a more manageable pupil. I put myself completely under your care, and vow to follow all your advice.'

'Well, then,' said my new instructress, whatever, you do take care of Ambition and Pleasure. Your escape from their toils is wonderful. Very few of your fellow travellers are so happy. Look now, what a crowd of inebriated loiterers lie prostrate at the feet of Pleasure. And behold what a terrible wild goose chase that set are led yonder by Ambition. You will find some of them every moment clambering to the very pinnacles of these rocks and mountains—always straining to rise above their fellow creatures, and almost invariably tumbling headlong to the earth ere they have half reached their wished for elevation. What is very singular too,' continued my companion, 'it is not always the strongest who seek to climb; but on the contrary, often those least athletic and agile.'

'Oh!' cried I, so struck with the elegance of a female stranger passing near, that I had forgotten to listen to the last part of Reason's discourse, 'who is that enchanting creature?'

'Pooh!' said my divinity.

I looked at her to see if she had beheld the lovely girl to whom I wished to direct her attention. I found her great grave eyes fixed upon her with a severe displeasure as well as scorn.

'I don't half like the old dame Reason,' thought I.

'The frivolous young thing, whom you so much admire,' said she.

'She is very graceful!' murmured I, 'and has the most soft and melting eyes.'

'Ba! there it is,' cried Reason, 'melting eyes—melting fiddlesticks. She is the greatest fool in the universe.'

'And what is her name?' asked I, rather sullenly, for I experienced a desire to advance and make her acquaintance, especially as she cast several bewitching glances on me; but I felt ashamed to withdraw so prematurely from my protectress.

'Her name is Fashion,' she replied. 'She is light, pretty, false, idle and capricious. She will love you to-day and despise you to-morrow. She has no religion—no sympathy—no affections—no morality—no taste—no truth. She sneers at every thing beautiful and holy. She worships a thousand things shallow, senseless and mean. For all the true glory and loveliness of life, of greatness, of virtue, she has no eye and no heart, but any thing clinquant and gaudy dazzles her immediately. Go, my friend, for I see you are desirous of making her acquaintance, but do not expect to acquire her favor by any of those virtues or talents in which I see you are tolerably rich, but hang rings and beads in your ears and nose, stick a feather in your cap, and contrive to make yourself outre in any manner you please. Conceal your nobleness and she may elevate you to a high but transient rank in her court.'

After such a tirade it was impossible that I could yield to my inclinations, which were decidedly to follow Fashion, whatever might be her faults. I therefore remained, and we even went trudging along together in no very cheerful humor with each other. I could not help confessing to myself that what Reason told me was generally true. I kept my eye on the alluring form of Fashion, and I soon discovered enough to render my escape from her snares also a matter of serious self-congratulation. Yet still I began to find Reason rather an irksome companion. She was almost always cross. Something was every moment occurring to put her out of temper. Every thing was false—every thing was dangerous. She was forever scolding and fretting. She seemed to take a malicious delight in choosing all the most homely, rough and stupid paths, and very often the most ordinary sort of companions, saturnine, fish-blooded old men, or withered old maids like herself. She was in her glory on the beaten highway, but trembled at every innocent deviation, and always fell into a fit of seriousness when I cast my eyes on a fountain, or a bower, or when a pretty winding path struck out from our monotonous turnpike. I was afflicted too with an incurable penchant for pretty winding paths. I hated beaten roads. I loved with all my heart fountains and bowers. The brilliant eyes of Fashion, too, yet often rose in my memory, and I sometimes heard the winning voice of Pleasure, and saw her lovely face, which always made the charmless countenance of Reason ten times more homely. Then Ambition with his noble form and martial air, clad in sleel, and pointing aloft, occasionally paused upon some overhanging cliff, and smiled scornfully upon us as we trudged obscurely on, and sometimes he made me a majestic sign to break away from my director and mount with him. But I had sworn to follow Reason as long as she would guide me, and I coolly, though reluctantly, turned my back upon all her enemies. As we toiled on, tired and dusty, we reached a palace. Nothing can exceed the grandeur which pervaded this stately abode. It seemed to contain every thing that could satify human desires, and many pedestrians were very strenuous in their exertions to enter. Some succeeded.

'I like this amazingly,' said I.

'Do you?' said Reason, with a sneer.

'Yes, it's just the kind of place I've been looking out for.'

'Ah!' ejaculated my monitress, drily.

'Yes. It's a beautiful place. I'm very tired. I never did like travelling afoot. I'm going in.'

'Are you?' said Reason, sarcastically. 'Then you will go in without me.'

'Just as you please, madam,' said I, tired of her eternal scolding and fuming. 'I am no schoolboy. It's a very charming place. Ever so many people have got in yonder. Why should not I? If you will accompany me—well—if you won't—well—whether you do or not, I mean to enter. Shall I be favored with your arm?'

'No.'

'As you please. Madam, good morning.'

I was making off in a proper pet, when she laid her hand dogmatically upon my shoulder, and placed her lips close to my ear, so that I could not help hearing, though I strove to be deaf, if possible. Her cold voice uttered these words; and when she pleases, she has tones that might split a millstone, though at other times she can whisper as feebly as any zephyr.

'Hark ye, young man. This temple belongs to Wealth. You will waste your life in vain attempts to scale the walls. If you must enter, I will show you a road, and furnish a guide, neither of which can fail; but here you will not only lose your time, but probably your honor.'

I felt that she spoke the truth, and I could not help hating while I yet yielded to her restraints. She then commenced a long tirade about I scarcely know what. I soon found out that she was particularly given to long speeches. She would prose away by the hour. It was a mighty dull piece of business, but what could I do? Without her assistance I should have lost my way at once.

'My good dame,' said I, frankly, 'you are a very useful person, but I wish you were as beautiful as Pleasure. It would be infinitely agreeable for me to profit by your invaluable counsels, if you were somewhat more—more entertaining as a companion; if you were a little less particular in your discipline—if you travelled by a pleasanter road, and if—'

A large and uncommonly fine cluster of grapes hung heavily just above my head. I reached my hand half unconsciously to pluck the tempting prize, and at the same time fill up the pause in my sentence.

'Hullo, there,' cried Reason. 'Let those grapes alone, if you please.'

'And why so?'

'They are not ours; besides, you have already partaken too freely of fruit.'

'But my lips are very dry.'

'And those grapes will only make them more so. Here, take this bit of sea-biscuit, it is excellent to moisten the mouth.'

And thus it was with my austere friend, and I was obliged to quench my thirst with sea-biscuit, while the luscious grapes hung within reach of my arm. I took the biscuit, however, and passed on.

'You are a very good sort of a person, after all,' said Reason,

This was nearly the first commendatory phrase that I had ever heard from her lips. It was spoken, too, in a tone at once gentle and sweet, that half reminded me of the soft voice of Pleasure. I looked up somewhat surprised, and my astonishment was not diminished by discovering that the features and form of my companion had also undergone a favorable transformation. She seemed younger, prettier and kinder. Her brow had lost its frown, her finger was no longer extended over me threateningly. Her eyes were larger, softer, and sweeter; and to my hearty delight, she actually smiled, disclosing a set of snowy teeth, lips of an unwilted youth, and altogether an expression social, endearing, and, in short, positively handsome. I must have appeared bewildered, for she only smiled the more, which seemed to throw over her a more pleasing air.

'Upon my word, madam,' said I, 'I have hitherto done you extraordinary injustice.'

'You have, indeed' she said, good humoredly.

'Why, you are almost as good looking as Pleasure herself.'

'Ah! my good youth,' she replied, 'I am one of those who are most liked when they are most known. Every thing disagreeable about me is experienced at first. It is only to strangers that my features are harsh, and many there are, who, disgusted with the first impression, desert me at the outset. But you must not compare my beauty with that of Pleasure or Fashion. Their charms are false and artificial. Their attractions are all thrown into the first glance. Had you followed them, you would by this time have discovered in their faces as great a change as is perceptible in mine, but of a very opposite kind. Your eye in them would have now beheld but two jaded, heartless hags, withered and shocking, yet so enervated would you have become by their treacherous arts, that even while you loathed you would find it impossible to desert them. The longer they are beheld the more ugly they grow; while I am always improving in agreeable appearance. I will never seek to inspire you with the delirium of a lover, but shall strive rather to awaken in your bosom the calm feeling of filial reliance and affection. I may not become your mistress, but let me be your mother. Come on, then, my son. In so long obeying my dictates, you have completed the most difficult part of your labor. We shall get along together more comfortably now. There will be between us more confidence and more enjoyment. I will now conduct you along any path you wish to take. Either that to wealth, or fame, or knowledge.'

'If I choose the one, must I consequently abandon the hope forever of pursuing the others?' inquired I.

'By no means,' she answered.

'Then lead me first,' said I, 'to the temple of Wealth. Do not forbid the wish, my guardian angel!' By this time I was quite in love with Reason's angelic countenance. Her reply made me more so.

'No, my son. I forbid it not. Wealth is one of the paths I would wish you certainly to follow, but, under proper guidance. Wealth used, not abused, is a great agent of happiness virtue. It bestows independence and the means of knowledge. But take care. You have some distance to travel yet. Nor can we get there without the aid of another companion whom you may find of as unpromising an exterior as my own.'

'Oh, never fear me,' was my answer, and on we went.

'The more I knew Reason, the more I loved her. I found now that she had one fault. It was a dangerous one, though I should not have always thought so. It was this:—She had a habit of falling asleep. You would have been incredulous. It really appeared sometimes that she was only making believe. She would keep her pace along with me as usual, till I repeatedly ascertained by the impunity with which I sometimes turned aside to gather a stray flower or pluck a handful of forbidden fruit, that she was as sound as a rock.

I should have mentioned that our road was now as much improved as the charms of my monitress, and I felt much safer and happier than I had ever done before.

At length, in the heat of the day, when, to say the truth, I was not a little tired, two girlish young creatures of the most uncommon loveliness, suddenly came upon us as we turned a corner. One was Hope and the other was Love. Oh, how beautiful they were! Hope came all glowing close to my side, and whispered the most delightful vision in my ear; while Love allowed me to draw her gently towards me, to fold her, all timid, modest and blushing, to my bosom, and to steal more than one fervid kiss from her cheeks, brow, lips, and drooping eyelids. What new enchantment chilled through my frame, and Reason never before had been so fast asleep.

'Come,' said Hope, 'let us fly. We are close to the temple of Wealth and Fame. I will teach you to scale the wall in a moment. Reason will lead you an endless and gloomy route, so that your youth will be consumed ere you attain the hour of enjoyment. Follow me, Love will be the companion of your flight—Come.'

'Sweet Love!' I exclaimed, enraptured; 'I will be your slave forever. Let us haste!'

'But Reason!' whispered Love, as I pressed her tenderly to my bosom. 'Oh, what will Reason say?'

'Hang Reason!' said I, relapsing into my old habits. 'She is a fool. Come, trembler, come!'

'We will scale the walls this moment!' said Hope.

I stepped forward, when a tall, dignified form, lofty as a Roman matron, stood full in my path. It was Reason. She was awake. Hope had fled. Even Love clung more alarmed than ever. I felt guilty, and expected a thunderbolt. But the voice of Reason was mild as the summer breeze, and she even smiled pityingly and affectionately as she spoke.

'Youth, and Love, and Hope, ha! a pretty groupe; and flying back from Reason, after Wealth, alone, the sport of chance and folly. No, no, my young people; Love, if you please, may be of our party; but idle Hope, that would lead you astray is well vanished. You would have gone direct to Pleasure, and then to Despair. No, no; I will find you a meeter companion. If you would reach the stately abode of Wealth, here is the divinity who alone can aid you.'

I knelt to the stranger and invoked her thus:

Economy, thou coyest of all the goddesses, descend to my side. Walk with, whisper to me, serve me, save me. With thee I may inhabit a palace, without thee a prision. The smile of Fortune I neither believe nor desire. The voice of Ambition I distrust, if not despise. At the allurements of Pleasure I tremble. From the enchantment of Generosity, I fly. Hope has deceived. Health has failed; even Virtue might desert me unaided by thee. Grave and homely divinity, I kneel at thy dark and deserted shrine. Bend on me thine austere features. Extend thy cold but friendly hand. Lead me through thy dim and lonely paths. The roar of the crowds will die away behind as we seek the temple of Wealth by thy obscure and narrow path!

BISCUIT. Biscuit is the only kind of unleavened bread that can be consientiously and cordially recommended. Being very thin, and particularly well baked, it forms a very easily digested article of food that ought to be much more extensively made use of than it is. We consider its being comparatively speaking so very little used, attributable to the bakers. Bakers have erred in adding other things besides flour, water and salt to their biscuit paste, and not sufficiently kneading and combining these indispensibles, and in not baking their biscuits sufficiently. Unleavened bread requises a great deal more baking than leavened bread; and the best proof that the ingredients are sufficiently well baked, is the length of time it will keep without spoiling. Of conrse, if sugar, or anything else, is added to the essential ingredients, this test becomes nugatory and valueless. Ship biscuit, in which the mass of dough is kneaded by an engine, and in which, in order to the biscuits keeping good during long voyages, the baking is done perfectly, is the only kind that can be seriously recommended as being suitable to the stomachs of children or of such valetudinarians as fermented bread does not agree with. Crushed into powder, a thing that may be easily done, ship biscuit forms an excellent food for children; and is susceptible of being made the basis of many kinds of puddings, which will be generally found to be both palatable and wholeseme by those whose stomachs are delicate, easily irritated, or of feeble powers.

PRICE OF LABOR. In England the average wages of a laborer are forty cents per day, but the standard varies greatly. The Nottingham stocking weavers in an address to the public, stated that after toiling from fourteen to sixteen hours per day, they could earn only one dollar and twenty five cents per week; and were obliged to subsist on bread and water, or potatoes and salt.

In Ireland, the average price of common labor is from ten to twelve cents per day. In France the common wages of a hired laborer, are thirty seven dollars fifteen cents for a man, and eighteen dollars fifteen cents for a woman, annually, the taxes upon which, are equal to one-fifth of the nett product. In some parts of India, where the laborer wants but a little rice and salt, the common wages are as low as five cents per day.

WANT OF DECISION. Perhaps in no way do mothers more effectually destroy their own influence with children, and injure them, than from neglecting to practice decision. The following little foct will illustrate the pernicious influence of this course of conduct.

A little girl remarked a short time since, that beaver hats were quite fashionable, and that she would have one. 'Have you forgotten,' said we, 'that your mother yesterday remarked that the hat you wore last winter is still quite neat, and that she did not intend to encourage extravagance and a love of fashion in a little girl.' 'Ah well,' replied she, 'no matter for that—mother said that our Susan should not go to Miss W.'s party the other evening, because she was very much afraid that there would be dancing there; but when sister cried about it and made a fuss, mother consented to let her go, and bought her a new pair of shoes and a pretty blue scarf to wear. Besides, I am quite sure it is quite right to wish to have a fashionable hat to go to church in, and I can tease mother to buy one. And I know that I shall get it—for mother often changes her mind.'

THE AXE. The power of the American axe, (says Latrobe in his book on the United States) and the skill with which it is wielded, may well excite the admiration of an European. The weapon itself is no more to be compared with the vile chopper commonly seen in the hands of one of our woodmen, than a gimlet can be compared to a centre-bit. It is formed upon a different principle—the handle is set far forward, and it acts upon the tree, more from the wedge-like form, its own weight, and the skillful swing which gives it impetus, than from any great exertion of strength on the part of the woodman. In fact, sleight more than strength is employed in its use. The rapidity with which the huge trees of the forest fall before a single pair of well-swung axes, is really marvellous; and the axe may rank with maize and steam as one of the three things which have conquored the Western World.

WASHINGTON'S OPINION OF WAR. In a letter to Col. Humphreys, written in 1785, Washington has the following sentiment:—'My first wish is to see this plague to mankind banished from the earth, and the sons and daughters of this world employed in more pleasing and innocent amusements, than in preparing implements and exercising them for the destruction of mankind.'

A Literary Shylock. Francis Philephus, a learned Italian, was born in 1398, at Tolentino. His great reputation and success in literature did not satisfy the pride of his scholarship; he wished to reign alone in the republic of letters. He would dispute on the most trivial subjects, and once wagered one hundred crowns on some minute question in grammar against the beard of a Greek philosopher, named Timotheus. Having won, no solicitation could prevail on him to remit the fine, and he most unmercifully shaved his antagonist, in spite of very ample offers to redeem the beard, but nothing else could soothe his irritation against any contradiction.

Taste and Gift. It is not given to every one to appreciate poetry of the highest and most spiritual order. To some the works of the divine Raphaelle himself, appears only as so many yards of canvass covered with faded and old fashioned figures; others, again, must be content to wait humbly without the holy of holies, while the strong thinker goes in and communes with the Deity face to face. When shall we be honest enough as a people, to confess, that we do not possess every gift; to be willing to take certain matters for granted, or to neglect them wholly in place of pronouncing upon the merits of each with equal confidence and show of understanding?

A Dangerous Question. A simple ostler being one day at confession to his priest, was asked by the Father if he had never greased the teeth of the guests' horses to prevent their eating their allowance of hay and oats. 'Never,' replied the ostler. At a subsequent confession the ostler acknowledged the frequent commission of that fraud. 'How,' said the Priest, 'I remember at your last confession you said you never done so?' 'No more I had then,' answered the ostler, 'for till you told me, I never knew that greasing a horse's teeth would prevent his eating.'

"Tender Mercies of War." At the battle of Austerlitz, a division of the Russian army which fought in alliance with the Austrians, in retreating mistook its way, and was gradually forced to Soult's advance, on a large extent of smooth space covered with snow. The space was found to be a frozen lake. The French halted at its edge, and commenced a heavy fire of cannon, not on the unfortunate Russians, but on the lake. The ice, loaded with men, horses and guns, at last gave way under the cannon balls, and in another moment the whole division was engulphed.

Life. A life of duty is the only cheerful life—for all joy springs from the affections; and it is the great law of Nature, that without good deeds, all good affection dies, and the heart becomes utterly desolate. The external world then loses all its beauty; poetry fades away from the earth; for what is poetry, but the reflection of all pure and sweet, all high and holy thoughts?

Laws in Massachusetts. A law in Massachusetts, adopted in the year 1617, was such that if any young man attempted to address a young woman without the consent of her parents, or in case of their absence, he should pay the fine of £4 for the first offence, £10 for the second, and be imprisoned for the third. Thus, in 1649, one Mathew Stanley was tried for engaging the affections of the daughter of John Tarbox, without the consent of her parents, and fined £15; fees 3s 6d. The same year three married women fined 5s for scolding.

China Ware. In China it is said that the prepared clay for the manufacture of porcelain ware, is buried in deep pits, and left to ripen there for half a century; by which means their porcelain attains that semi-pellucid and pearly delicacy which has never been equalled either in this country or in England.

Linseed Cough Syrup. Boil an ounce of linseed in a quart of water till half wasted;—then add six ounces of moist sugar, two ounces of sugar candy, half an ounce of Spanish liquorice, and the juice of a large lemon. Let the whole slowly simmer together, till it becomes of a syrupy consistence; when cold, put to it a table spoonfull of the best old rum.

Cure for Hydrophobia. A cotemporary says—'The only course we could recommend to prevent hydrophobia, is to cut every dog's tail off close behind his ears. We have no doubt of its efficacy.'

Baked Beans. Do you understand doing this matter in the right way? Well, we are glad of it, but as every one may not understand we would just say to them, put in a lump of salaratus as big as a walnut, and a little molasses, with your beans before baking, and you will find them greatly improved.

Affection. 'I speak as I feel,' returned Clifford; 'were the woman I love suffering through poverty, I would beg with her, if I could not relieve her; through injustice I would defend her; from unkindness I would protect her; and if the world forsook her, I would be to her the world.'

The use of 'your humble servant,' came first into England on the marriage of Queen Mary, daughter of Henry IV of France; which is derived from 'votre tres humble serviteur.' The usual salutation before that time was 'God keep you'—'God be with you.' And amongst the vulgar, 'How dost do,' with a thump on the shoulder.

Blessed are the orphan children; for they have no mothers to spank them.

Gas, which is now much used for giving light, was first introduced for that purpose, in England, in the year 1802, by Messrs. Bolton & Watt, of Birmingham, to light their foundry, on the occasion of rejoicing for peace.

A brave man thinks no one his superior who does him an injury, for he has it then in his power to make himself superior to the other, by forgiving it.

The first queen of the Sandwich Islands, it is said, converted to christianity, was called Koopoulani, signifying 'the dropping of the clouds of heaven.'

Blessed are they that are ignorant; for they are happy in thinking that they know everything.

Foote advised a gentleman who desired to attend a masquerade ball in a new character, to 'go sober.'

An English writer states that Englishmen are, upon an average, one inch taller than Frenchmen, and Americans one inch taller than Englishmen.

The true estimation of living is not to be taken from age, but action; a man may die old at forty, and a child at fourscore.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, DEC. 9, 1848.

John A. Green, Editor.

An Old Swindler. The New York Tribune publishes the following scrap, for the benefit of certain sufferers:

O Yes, Certainly!—A genteel-looking individual, driving a fashionable buggy, has been travelling through Connecticut lately, disposing of the following card to merchants and others:

New England Mercantile Union Directory. This ticket will entitle the bearer to the circulation of his Business Card, a new Map of New England, an Almanac for 1849, a Blank Memorandum for every day in the year, a Statistical Register and Business Directory for New England.

As soon as issued, copies will be sent to some responsible man in every town for distribution, and will be delivered free of further expense on presentation of this ticket. Price $1. Publishers and proprietors, Fulton Street, New York.

Pratt & Co.

Several of the holders of these green cards have found their way to this office on their unavailing search after the "New England Mercantile Union Directory." It is needless to say they were unsuccessful in their inquiries, and went away convinced that, although from the land of wooden nutmegs, there were some kind of tricks which they were not quite up to.

The Boston Saturday Rambler remarks on the above—

This Pratt was long known in Boston as a most accomplished and successful swindler, and as he has now taken to a wider field, we doubt not he will cut a large swarth before he gets through. He was formerly in the book agency and publishing business, in Court Street, but left suddenly, one day, else he had now been a resident of Charlestown prison, if there is any virtue in the laws or their guardians We trust he will yet meet with his reward, and in the meantime we would caution our country friends against both Pratt and his 'Directory.'

The caution given above is very good, but lacks one thing necessary to perfection, that is, it came too late. As near as we can find out, a man calling himself "Pratt & Co." did quite an extensive business in this place, several weeks ago. The ease and readiness with which he pocketed the dollars, has proved most conclusively the existence among our people of a generous, trusting and honorable spirit. Pity that where men are disposed to trust one another, although strangers, their confidence should be abused, and they be driven to believe this to be the best maxim, viz: "Every man that you do not know is a rogue." Better be 'taken in' once in a while than harbor such a cold and selfish spirit; still there is one thing that surprises us much, and that is the success that attends travelling agents who canvass our country towns soliciting subscriptions for books, magazines, etc. Every other man, almost, will pay his dollar or more to one of these men, who takes the money away from the place to the detriment, it may be, of one of our own establishments, who solicit our encouragement and in whose responsibility we can rely. "Encourage your own" is no meaningless maxim, for upon the manner in which our own tradesmen and mechanics are sustained must depend wholly and entirely the prosperity and success of our town.

Slander Case. A case came before the Supreme Judicial Court, at Boston, the past week, in which Rev. Dr. Storrs of Braintree, was defendant in an action for slander; charging him with having made a written declaration before his congregation excommunicating a Mrs. Farnsworth from the church on the alleged ground of adultery. The defence urged that fornication was charged instead of adultery, and the case, under an agreement of parties, is to go before the whole court on a question of law, on the point that the defendant was ready to show that fornication, as well as adultery, was forbid by the seventh commandment—that fornication was only meant to be charged, and that the congregation so understood it.

Meeting of the Electors. The Electors of this Commonwealth, recently chosen by the Legislature, met at the State House, in Boston, on the 6th inst., and cast their votes for President and Vice President of the United States. Zachary Taylor of Louisiania, and Millard Fillmore of New York, received the whole number of votes,—twelve; and Col. William Schouler, of the Boston Atlas, was appointed Messenger, to take the proceedings to Washington.

District Court. The regular Term of the United States District Court commenced in Boston this week. Benjamin Perkins of Roxbury, was appointed foreman of the grand jury, and Benjamin Ryan of Braintree, foreman of the traverse jury. The grand jury commenced the hearing of complaints, and the traverse jury was dismissed till Monday next.

Members of Congress. It appears by the official returns, that Mr. Winthrop, in District No. 1, Mr. Duncan in No. 3, Mr. Ashmun in No. 6, Mr. Rockwell in No. 7, Mr. Mann in No. 8, and Mr. Grinnell in No. 10, have been elected to Congress from this State. In Districts 2, 4, 5, and 9, there is no choice. A second trial has been ordered for Monday, Jan. 1st. 1849.

Foreign. The steamship Britannia arrived at Boston on the 6th inst. The news is not of great moment. Increased confidence was manifest in the mercantile community of England. There had been some indications of a renewal of the political storm in Ireland. Quiet existed in France, where preparations for the election of President were going on. The prospect was still favorable to Louis Napoleon.

Congress. Both branches of Congress met and organized on Monday last. Notice was given in the Senate, of a bill establishing territorial government for Nebraska, Minesota, New Mexico and California. The President's Message was given to both houses on Tuesday. It is a very lengthy document, occupying about twelve closely printed columns of the Boston Times.

Union Magazine. This elegant monthly periodical, the December number of which has come to hand, has been purchased by J. Sartain & Co., the celebrated engravers of Philadelphia, and the publication will be removed to that city. Its merits heretofore are well known, and its appearance under its new proprietors fully sustains the high reputation it had previously attained. Arrangements have been made greatly to enhance its value without increasing the price.

Arrested. The rogue who burglariously entered the store of Messrs. Abercrombie & Bent of this town, has been arrested at an auction room in Boston, where he had left some of the stolen property for sale. His name is John Bryant, fifty three years of age, and has served in the State Prison five times. He was committed to jail in Dedham, for trial at the ensuing term of the Court.

Retirement. Moses Y. Beach of the New York Sun, who has managed that popular paper with signal ability for several years past, has retired and left the establishment in charge of his sons. From poor and honest circumstances, Mr. Beach, through untiring perseverance, in the space of fourteen years has risen to affluence and standing in society which true merit alone deserves and will certainly receive. We hope that his sons may be blessed with the same good fortune.

Engine Treat. The Niagara Engine Company of this town, and friends, regaled themselves with a superb "clam chowder" last Wednesday evening. The Hancock House landlord prepared the luxury for No. 1, and it was number one in all particulars.

Editorship. Benjamin Perley Poore, Esq. has become editor of the Boston Daily Bee. He is an easy and pleasant writer, and has seen service in the newspaper business. We wish him success, and trust that the Bee will continue to sustain the high reputation it has already acquired and improve under the supervision of the new occupant of the editorial chair.

Milliken's. We have visited Milliken's eating-house, Mr. Lynn News, and got a very poor dinner.

Yale College catalogue just issued, comprises, in all departments, 517 pupils.

Girls! are you aware that less than one month more of leap year remains?

A court martial for the trial of Brigadier General Dunham will commence its session at the State House next Wednesday, on charges preferred by Major General Appleton Howe.

A man has been arrested in Cambridge on a charge of uttering counterfeit dimes and half dimes, and committed for trial. A quantity of false coin and implements for coining were found in his possession.

A dwelling-house and a barn were destroyed by fire in Boxbury, last Sunday night.

The whigs of Ward Five, Boston, supplied two hundred and thirty families with turkies, etc, etc, on Thanksgiving day, instead of spending the money in celebrating the election of Gen. Taylor.

The Railroad Depot in Taunton was set on fire last Monday night, and a large building, together with about seven hundred cords of wood destroyed. Loss estimated at five thousand dollars.

The Oberlin Institute, in Ohio, lately conferred the title of Bachelor of Arts on a young lady—Ann Mahon.

A New York packet ship arrived at that place from Havre, last week, having lost seven persons by death from the Asiatic Cholera.

Expeditions to California are fitting out at Troy, St. Louis, New Orleans and New York. Joint stock gold huntiug companies are also organizing in Boston.

DIED.

In this town, 5th inst, Mrs. Betsey, wife of Mr. James Green, aged 65 years and 6 months.

The obituary notice relative to the late Mr. Bryant Newcomb of Braintree, a revolutionary pensioner, which was intended for this week's paper, has been delayed by the writer until our next number.

NOTICES.

The annual meeting of the Quincy Lyceum, for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business, will be held at the Lyceum Room, next MONDAY EVENING, at half past seven o'clock.

JAMES M. WADE, Secretary.

Rev. Mr. Waldo of Cambridge, is expected to lecture on Temperance, in the Stone Meeting house at the Railway, Milton, TO-MORROW EVENING, at six o'clock, should the weather be favorable.

T. KELLOGG, Secretary.

An adjourned meeting of the Free Soil Club, will be held in the Lyceum Room, THIS EVENING, (Dec. 9th,) at half past six o'clock.

The subjects for the consideration of the meeting, are—

First—Shall any person who is not a member of the Quincy Free Soil Club, have the privilege of voting at the meetings of the Club?

Second—Shall any variations from the regular nominations, be made after they have come before the public, and if so, in what manner.

A punctual attendance is requested.

Valuable Testimony from the South.

We like, at all times, to give credit when credit is due, and if at the same time we can relieve the distressed, we are doubly gratified; we, therefore, give the following voluntary testimony as to the beneficial effects of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, by the editor of the Columbia South Carolinian, who appears to have obtained great relief by its use.—Old Dominion, Portsmouth, Va.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

We seldom resort to patent medicines, having a great respect for the skill of the regular profession, but chance threw into our way the above named medicine, immediately after the close of the last session of the Legislature, when our lungs were almost dried up by the highly rarified atmosphere of our stove warmed State House. The Balsam immediately relieved us of a most harrassing cough, which threatened our health in a serious degree. We feel that we are indebted to it for some fifteen pounds of animal weight—which addition once FELT, cannot be forgotten.

None genuine unless signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper.

For sale in Quincy by Mrs. E. HAYDEN; Braintree, Oliver Perkins; South Braintree, J. Stoddard. Sold also by Druggists generally.

Dec. 9. 2w

The large sale of Brown's Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters, is another proof of its efficacy. It is now about three years since it was first offered to the public, although it has been used by one of the most distinguished physicians for many years in private practice; since which the sale has steadily increased, and it has been sent for from all parts of the country, where it was never advertised, but recommended by persons that have used it. It has been shipped to foreign ports, and found ready sale: that alone would seem to be proof enough of its utility.

How many medicines there are advertised that never sell, and soon go down and are forgotten! How different it is with this? It finds a ready sale where it has never been advertised; and its sale continues to increase in all places as it becomes known.

For sale in Quincy by Mrs. E. HAYDEN and CHARLES CLAPP; Braintree, Oliver Perkins; South Braintree, J. Stoddard & Co. Sold also by agents generally. 2w Dec. 9.

Worms! Worms!!

Are safely, speedily and most effectually expelled from the system by the use of

WHITWELLS PINK ROOT SYRUP.

Spigilia, or Indian Pink,

has been in use for hundreds of years among the Indian tribes of North America, as a certain remedy for Worms.

Almost every family in N. E., is acquainted with its use. The great and only objection heretofore to its use, has been that it was necessary to pour half a pint down a childs throat in order to destroy and expell the worms; but that objection exists no longer, In the Pink Root Syrup, you have the strongest possible preparation of the Pink root, united with Cathartics and Tonics, made into a pleasant and healthful Syrup, which children will take without any trouble. Indeed, they like it much, and will never refuse to take it. The dose of this agreeable medicine for an infant is only

Half a Teaspoon Full.

Full and ample directions accompany its use. The public are respectfully requested to give it a trial, and they will never use any other remedy.

—Also for sale—

Whitwells Syrup of Blackberry,

(Made of the Root.)

For Dysentary, Diarrhoea, Cholera Morbus.

Encourage your Own.

To the People of Quincy—

THE following is a well known motto, and strictly true:

"That County or Town that gives the most liberal encouragement to its own manufactures of every kind is well known to thrive, and increase in wealth and population."

There are a few interesting facts, of which we wish to remind you, and which we are inclined to think have slipped from the memory of some, and which it will be for your advantage as well as ours to remember.

1st. That at the QUINCY BOOKSTORE you will find all the

in use in this and the neighboring towns.

2d. That at the same place you will find every kind of

Blank Account Book,
RECORD or MEMORANDUM BOOK.

3d. That there you will find a great assortment of

Miscellaneous, Juvenile and Toy Books.

4th. That there you will find all kinds of

STATIONERY.

5th. That there you will find an innumerable variety of

FANCY GOODS.

6th. That all the above will be sold at the very

Lowest Market Prices.

7th. That we are entirely disinterested when we say that you will be much better satisfied with yourselves and your bargains if you trade at home, in preference to "out of town."

8th. That there you will find a GOOD LIBRARY where you can procure reading on reasonable terms.

9th. That the Proprietors are agents for all the popular MAGAZINES, receiving the subscriptions themselves and furnishing the numbers on their own responsibility, free of any expense. Many have forgotten this of late, preferring to subscribe of some travelling agent, to one in their own town.

10th That they RE-BIND old Books, Pamphlets, Periodicals, Music, etc, "as cheap as they can afford to and as quick as anybody."

These things we wish to call to your memory, because while we have been moving on in a quiet kind of a way, you seem partly to have forgotten the old place, thinking perhaps that we did not keep up with the times in the variety of our goods and also in prices. Our rule, like that of many others, is, "quick sales and small profits," therefore call in and we will supply you most satisfactorily.

There's no mistake about it.

What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.

A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay;
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.

Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it;
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.

RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

HYMN OF THANKSGIVING.

To him who was dead yet in heaven is living,—
To him who died for us we offer thanksgiving;
Oh, praised be his name who the death bands hath riven,
And opened for sinners a path-way to heaven.

With hearts full of love by his mercy recovered
From sin's thorny path, where the death angel hovered,
We lift our glad voices in humble endeavor,
To praise him whom God hath exalted forever.

Now swell the loud anthem, awake the sweet timbrells,
Blow, blew the shrill trumpets and strike the bold cymbals,
To Jesus the conq'rer o'er death's gloomy regions,
To Jesus the Savior of earth's ransom'd legions.

The Heavens shall echo, the angels shall listen,
The stars at his name with new lustre shall glisten,
While his and our father looks down from above,
And unites in the praise of the child of his love.

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

THE FIVE STAGES.

I saw him first upon his mother's knee,
And never was a fairer lovelier child;
The mother looked upon her babe and smiled,
Then felt a secret, heaven-like joy to see
Her lovely boy admired—then to her breast
She clasped the cherub, lulling him to rest.

I saw him next a blooming, romping boy,
Hunting the bee in summer's sunny beam.
Or catching minnows in the limpid stream,
His open face suffused with smiles of joy;
Unstain'd with vice, he spent the live-long day,
In meads and hedge-rows, happiness and play.

I saw him next approaching manhood's stage;
But, ah! how changed! gay fashion had unfurl'd
Her specious flag—while mixing with the world
He learned to gibe the poor, to laugh at age,
To sneer at mild religion and to spurn
His parents' precepts, treating them with scorn.

When next I saw him sunken was his eye,
And pale his cheek—and eager as he took
The brimming cup—his nerveless hand it shook,
And as he drained it I could hear him sigh.
Then learn'd, in hours of darkness that he met
With gamblers, and must brook a gambler's fate.

I saw him after many years had pass'd,
His mind was shrouded—dark to reason's rays,
And in a madhouse spent his wretched days;
I could not help but weep to see him cast
A look so full of horror and so wild—
Then think I knew him once an angel child.

LINES

Where shall we make her grave!
Oh! where the flowers wave,
In the free air!
Where the shower and singing bird
Midst the young leaves are heard—
There—lay her there!

Harsh was the world to her!
Now may sleep minister
Balm for each ill.
Look on sweet Nature's breast,
Let the meek heart find rest,
Deep, deep and still!

Murmur glad waters by!
Faint gales with happy sigh
Come wandering o'er
That green and mossy bed,
Where on a gentle head
Storms beat no more!

What though for her in vain
Falls now the bright spring rain,
Plays the soft wind?
Yet still from where she lies
Should blessed breathings rise,
Gracious and kind.

Therefore let song and dew
Thence in the heart renew
Life's vernal glow!
And o'er that holy earth
Scents of the violet's birth,
Still come and go.

Oh! then where wild flowers wave,
Make ye her mossy grave,
In the free air!
Where shower and singing bird
Midst the young leaves are heard—
There—lay her there!

ANECDOTES.

At the battle of Falkirk, a Highlander was engaged ie rifling the pockets of an English officer he had just cut down, when a comrade cried out for 'shares.' 'Hold off!' cried the Scott; 'can ye na kill a shentleman for yourself?'

'Do you know that your account is still unsettled?' said a creditor to a long-winded debtor. 'I know it, my dear boy, and so am I unsettled; but a neighbor of mine threatens to settle me very soon, and then, I guess, it will be all right.'

'What a beautiful place Heaven is!' exclaimed a little boy. 'Why do you think so?' exclaimed his father. 'Because,' said he alluding to the stars, 'the nails in the floor are so beautiful.'

'What,' said an ex-volunteer to a comrade whom he thought he left at Monterey, but whom he found engaged in the very difficult vocation of driving a lot swine—'what, do I find you here? I thought I had left you in the army.' 'Ah, no,' replied his comrade, 'you see I have abandoned the sword and taken to the pen.'

'Sambo, where you ketch dem fish?' 'In de mouf, you fool.'

The Boston Almanac for 1849,
BY S. N. DICKINSON,

WILL be publiseed about the 1st of December. It will be printed upon new type, and contain more pages than any previous number. Beautifully bound in cloth, and gilt. It will contain

A new and accurate MAP of the vicinity of Boston, embracing a distance of 15 or 20 miles around the city. Long Pond, and the whole line of the Aqueduct are delineated upon it. The outside towns on the Map, are Hull, Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth, Braintree, Canton, Dedham, Medford, Sherburne, Framingham, Sudbury, Concord, Acton, Carlisle, Billerica, Wilmington, Danvers, Beverly and Marblehead. All the Islands in the harbor are set down. The Watering Places—Phillips Beach, Nahant Bay and Beach, Nahant, Chelsea Beach, etc

An improved set of CALENDAR PAGES, calculated by Prof. Pierce, of Cambridge. The calendar pages are accompanied by a short description of the appearance of the Heavens on the 15th of each month. Opposite to each calender page there is a blank leaf for memorandums, containing a blank line and date for every day in the month. These MEMORANDA PAGES are of great convenience to an individual, or for the use of a family, in making memorandums from day to day

The BUSINESS DIRECTORY of the city of Boston, corrected and enlarged. This Directory exhibits all trades, business and professions under their appropriate heads; that is, under the head Apothecaries, will be found the names of all persons engaged in that business; under the head of Bakers, the names and places of all engaged in that business, and so on to the end of the alphabet. This document is one of great usefulness to the citizen, and of still greater importence to persons in the country, as here they have laid before them the key to the whole business population of the metropolis. It occupies about 80 closely printed pages of the Almanac.

An interesting historical account of the PUBLIC SCHOOLS of Boston. This article has been prepared with great care and much research, by Isaac F. Shepard, Esq, Principal of the Otis School. It embraces the subject from that period of time when public schools were first thought of by our forefathers, and traces it up, in its growth, from that time to the present. It is deeply interesting, and occupies 36 pages of the Almanac. An ENGRAVED VIEW of each of the Public Schools is given, and two views of Model Primary Schools, which have been erected within the past year or two.

Some account of a WINTER PASSED IN FLORIDA, by an invalid, in hopes of being restored to health. His experience given, which may be of great convenience to those intending to visit that region for a similar purpose. Accompanying this article, the writer has prepared a set of WEATHER TABLES, showing the temperature in Jacksonville, Florida, and Boston, for one year. To the curious in such matters, it is thought these tables will be very interesting.

A Table of the 772 Streets, Places and Alleys in the city of Boston, giving the beginning and terminus of each street, and the location of the places and alleys. With this table the stranger can find any street in the city.

A list of 927 EXPRESSES that leave Boston daily, semi-weekly and weekly.

A list of the RAIL-ROADS diverging from Boston, and a list of the Branch Roads running from the Boston Roads.

These are the principal features of the Boston Almanac for 1849. But it embraces a great variety of other matters, useful and entertaining to the reader.

This Almanac contains TWO HUNDRED and TWENTY closely printed pages. The quantity of matter is greater than that found in an ordinary 8vo. of 500 pages. The octavo volume would sell for two or three dollars. For the Almanac, the price is only TWENTY FIVE CENTS, per single copy. By wholesale, a very liberal discount is made.

Orders sent to Messrs. B B. MUSSEY & Co., 29 Cornhill, and to Mr. THOMAS GROOM, 82 State Street, Publishers, will meet with immediate attention. 3w Boston, Nov. 18.

Spring Medicines.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BEWARE of Imitations, in Massachusetts and New York, of the Compound Fluid Extract of Sarsaparilla and Dock Root.
The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all
Diseases of the Blood,
such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated
Dandelion Panacea,
an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibillious remedy on record.

Oleum Jecoris Aselli,
Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,
For Coughs, Bronchetis, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.

The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

NORFOLK COUNTY
Health Insurance Company.
Capital $50,000.
Hon. SHERMAN LELAND, President.
Gen. H. A. S. DEARBORN, Vice President.

IS now organized and prepared to receive applications from MALES and FEMALES for insurance against SICKNESS and ACCIDENTS, which shall disable the insured, and prevent them from pursuing their usual avocations.

Health Insurance Companies are particularly adapted, although all are invited to partake of their advantages, to the wants of persons of moderate means and those who depend upon their daily labor or business for the supply of their daily wants, who when SICKNESS comes or ACCIDENTS happen, have increased expenses with diminished resources, by the payment of a small sum annually, the poor man can provide for a day of disaster and when it does come his wants are supplied with as much certainty as if he were in possession of an amount of wealth, the income of which would be equal to that of the weekly benefits he has secured to himself by his Policy of Insurance. It is estimated that more than FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS have been paid during the past year, in WEEKLY BENEFITS, to the sick and disabled, by the Health Insurance Companies of New England; which has made many hearts glad that would otherwise have been forlorn and depressed; young men have thereby been prevented from becoming embarrassed by debts, families made comfortable, while their usual resources were suspended, and the moral effect of these institutions upon the community have been in the highest degree favourable.

The following scale of Rates of Insurance and Weekly Benefits established by this Company, show how much each annual payment will draw weekly in case the insured is sick or by any casuality disabled.

MALES, when disabled by sickness or accident—
from the age of fifteen to forty five years:

Paying $3	a year,	draw	$2	weekly.

" 10	"	"	6	"
" 12	"	"	7	"
" 15	"	"	10	"
" 27	"	"	20	"

The above Rates are for one year. Insurance can be effected with this Company for two and three years at a small additional premium—no payment is to exceed $100 in any one year.

FEMALES insured for one year only.

Ages fifteen to forty-five

Paying $2,50	per year,	draws	$1,50	per week.

The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No. 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES.

Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:

THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc, etc, yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.

The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.

THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Sealds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.

The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.

The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.

The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

MISCELLANY.

THEY CAN'T FOOL ME.

"Suspicion is a heavy armor, and
With its own weight impedes us more."

Billy Keene's peculiar boast was the utter impossibility of being hoaxed, or in his more expressive phraseology, fooled. 'They can't fool me!' was ever at his tongue's end, and so evident were his attempts to impress this fact upon all with whom he had anything to do, that he not unfrequently made a fool of himself.

Billy always made a point of expressing his disbelief of everything, however plausable, that reached his ears, which, by the way, were exceedingly easy of access, being not more than five feet two inches from the ground, when their owner stood upon his feet.

Suspicion was always the 'one idea' in his mind; he suspected every body of abortive designs to gull him—from the most respectable friend, down to poor old Isaac, who had no more idea of a practical joke, than a popular bear might be expected to have of a baby-jumper.

Billy was not naturally hard-hearted, but he was so suspicious, that he turned twenty beggars from his door, where he relieved the necessities of one. In vain was the imploring eye raised, and the wasted hand extended to him for alms. The more piteous the story the more evidently was it to him a hoax. 'It all sounds very pitiful,' he would exclaim, 'but I've seen too much of the world—I've heard too much such stuff—it's of no use—you can't fool me! and the wretched mendicant was compelled to seek in other quarters for that charity which believeth all things, which thinketh no evil.

Billy was once married, but it was a long time ere he was fooled into the state of 'double blessedness,' (yet as he himself has acknowledged) he often met with hair-breadth escapes, before he finally hooked. We recollect his boasting once during his bachelorship, that Emma D. the only daughter of a neighboring merchant, was endeavoring to snare him into the matrimonial noose. He was making the boast to his particular friend, 'other people don't notice it,' said he, 'but it is as plain as day to me. She thinks I don't see her plan! ha! ha! she can't fool me! Folks say her father will give her a cool ten thousand; humbug! If she's got the spoons why should she be so anxious to get into my good graces? that's the question! She's rather pretty to be sure, but I wonder if she thinks that I believe her complexion and teeth natural. Guess she'll find I ain't quite so verdant as she thinks I am. No sir, she can't fool me.'

Billy accompained these words with a sly wink of peculiar expression, and gave no little cause of astonishment to his friend, who, for reasons best known to himself, was aware that the young lady was innocent of any such intention as Billy imputed to her. Billy was no less astonished the next day, at hearing of the marriage of his friend, early that morning with the identical Emma D., whose ten proved to be fifteen thousand, and whose personal charms were all natural, maugre Bill's suspicions. His friend found in Emma a lovely, and devoted wife, while he, still wrapped in his 'heavy armor' remained a bachelor.

But at length, as we have already told you, our hero was married. How any mortal of Eve managed to fool him into a union is now and ever must remain a profound mystery. We are certain, however, that he was married, for we find him at fifty, a widower with an only daughter, beautiful girl of eighteen.

Billy was no less astonished the next day, at hearing of the marriage of his friend, early that morning with the identical Emma D., whose ten proved to be fifteen thousand, and whose personal charms were all natural, maugre Bill's suspicions. His friend found in Emma a lovely, and devoted wife, while he, still wrapped in his 'heavy armor' remained a bachelor.

But at length, as we have already told you, our hero was married. How any mortal of Eve managed to fool him into a union is now and ever must remain a profound mystery. We are certain, however, that he was married, for we find him at fifty, a widower with an only daughter, beautiful girl of eighteen.

Our worthy friend was proud of his daughter Mary; and well he might be: for she had a sweet lovely face, and a faultless form, and there was a world of mirthfulness and mischief in her sparkling black eyes. Nor was it strange that others should love her besides her suspicious old father, who couldn't be fooled. There was a village rumor, (and we cannot deny that Madame Rumor, for once, told the truth,) of a warm attachment between Mary and Edward Seymour, a young merchant of the neighborhood, of whom every body spoke in the highest terms of praise. All commended his good nature, frankness and ability; but as Billy always stemmed the current of public opinion, he had the penetration to percieve that these lauded virtues were all moonshine, that in their estimation of Seymour, the world were all wrong, and so he obstinately opposed the contemplated union. He was inexorable and finally Mary out of respect for him, yielded an apparent compliance to his wishes, and Seymour's visits and communications with her, were discontinued; and though she tried to appear as mirthful and happy as ever, yet her heart was ill at ease, and her imprisoned love would betray itself in her every look and action.

At length Edward, whose 'hope never died,' laid a plan for possessing himself of Mary's hand—in fact, the desperate and almost hopeless project of fooling old Billy Keene! Did he succeed? Have patience, reader, and you shall hear all.

One sultry July afternoon a pale faced young gentleman, whom Billy remembered to have seen in the streets, but with whom he had no acquaintance, called at his house and requested to see him immediately on important business. He was shown by Mary into the parlor, and our hero soon entered.

The pale faced young gentleman first introduced himself, and then the object of his visit.

'I have an unpleasant disclosure to make, Mr. Keene, which is of the greatest importance to you, and to the happiness of your daughter. You are of course aware that Edward Seymour has succeeded in making his friends believe that he has given up all hopes of marrying your daughter; this is merely to fool your suspicions, but I am confident that you have too much acuteness to believe it.'

'Certainly,' said Billy, highly gratified, 'go on, he can't fool me.'

'Well, as I was going on to remark, my room at the Eagle, is next to Seymour's, and this morning I overheard him relating in high glee, to some one in his room, a plan for overreaching you! and eloping with Miss Mary! I getest eavesdropping, but he was talking in a loud tone and his door was a little way open—so it was forced upon me.'

'Ha! ha!' roared Billy, 'thinks he can fool me! the idiot. I should just like to have him try it. How is he going to do it?'

'His plan,' said the pale face, 'is deeply laid but he is a fool to imagine that he can deceive you by any contrivance of his brain. He has employed a little black boy who brushes boots and shoes and does odd jobs at the Eagle, to call at your house after dark this evening, with directions to tell you that your sister Jemima has been taken with a dangerous attack of her old complaint, and wishes you to come to Pineville, to see her immediately; and while you are gone, he intends to take your daughter in a carriage, to Jones' tavern, on the river road. Squire Curtiss is to go with them to perform the ceremony, which will make them man and wife.'

'A dutiful daughter, Mary is, indeed; the jade! to consent to such a deception on her poor old father; I'll lock the hussy up till she comes to her senses, and I'll horsewhip the nigger, and pull Seymour's nose—I'll teach 'em to try to fool me.'

'Calm yourself, I entreat you, my dear sir,' said the pale faced young man, 'reflect that such a course of proceedings would not only make the affair public, but it might seriously affect your daughter's reputation and happiness; to be sure she has been guilty of disrespect to you, but then she has undoubtedly been drawn into it by that vagabond Seymour. I know, sir, that you could not have been duped by two such green ones, even if I had not discovered their plan to you, but at the same time, (if I may presume to offer you my poor advice) I think that you had better pretend to believe the yarn about your sister's illness, and under cover of going to Pineville, proceed straight to Jones' Tavern, wait for the runaways, break up their plan, cover them with confusion, and bring your daughter home. This would convince them forever, of what they ought to know already, that they might as well give in—that they can't fool you.'

'Capital idea!' said Billy, 'much indebted to you, sir. You're right, they can't fool me!—Good day.'

'Good day, sir.'

Billy indulged in an immoderate fit of laughter, when his pale faced visiter was gone. 'So Edward Seymour was going to fool me, was he? ha! ha! I guess he'll find me a tough one, though; guess he can't be fooled so easy neither! and so deuced kind in him, too, to put me on my guard. He's a gentleman, and no mistake.'

The afternoon, dark and cloudy, soon passed away, and after it came a black night and a black boy. Billy heard the message of the latter with well counterfeited concern for Jemima's illness, and bidding old Isaac saddle his mare, was soon on the road to Jones.

The night was black, and a drizzling rain chilled his bones, but still he muttered to himself, as he slapped his arms together, to accelerate the tardy circulation. 'Cracky, how they'll look, when they find me waiting for them at Jones'! S'pose they think I'm half way to Pineville, by this time. Ha! ha! guess Jemima ain't very bad. They can't fool me!'

'Why, bless my soul, Mr. Keene, what brought you here in this storm,' said the burly Jones, as our worthy friend, drenched to the skin, reined the old mare up to the door. His only answer was, 'you'll see something presently, Mr. Jones, that'll tickle you some. I calculate, they can't fool me.'

The old mare was soon in the comfortable stable, while her owner, pacing the bar-room floor only uttered at intervals, 'you'll see some sport presently, Mr. Jones; they can't fool me.'

An hour passed away—another—eleven o'clock, and no carriage!

'That pale faced Jackass couldn't have been fooling me, could he?' thought the suspicious Billy. 'No, by jingo, here they come. Now Mr. Jones, if you want to see some rare fun, just step to the door; they can't fool me.'

The carriage rattled up to the door in furious haste; the driver reined the reeking horses, and sprang from his seat; the steps were thrown down; Edward Seymour leaped out, assisted Mary to alight, and Squire Curtiss followed. Billy concealed himself behind the door, until the happy trio were in the setting room; then with an air of triumph, he very coolly walked in, exclaiming, 'Smart set you be, thought you could fool me, did you? ha! ha! Come Miss Jack-a-napes, you'd better put your bonnet on again, sister Jemima ain't dangerous and it's pretty late, so we'd better be getting toward home, ha! ha! fool me will you?'

Mr. Keene looked around to see what effect his unexpected appearance had made; but no one seemed at all surprised! Mary did not, as might have been expected, faint away on the occasion, but stepping forward, half weeping—half smiling, she broke the awful pause with, 'I'm ready to go in a minute, pa; but first let me introduce to you my husband, Edward Seymour; we were married quietly at home, about an hour before we started. It was so kind in you to go away and leave us to make our own arrangements, that we thought it would be to bad to make you ride home on horseback in this storm, so we came to fetch you back, and offer you a seat in our carriage. Now you'll forgive us, wont you, pa?'

'I'm sold, give me your hand,' said the crest fallen Billy. Give me your hand, Seymour. This is the first time I was ever fooled, and you are the first person who could ever fool me—God bless you, my son,' said the old man, affected to tears, 'you've done what no other living man could do—you've fairly fooled me, you've won her, and you're worthy of her.'

The remainder of the scene, our pen, though made of the stoutest of steel, is too feeble to describe. Old Jones, who had been a wondering spectator of the singular meeting, shook hands with Billy, and assured him that he had seen much more fun than he anticipated; and when the wedding party started for home, Mr. Keene recognized by the coach light, the pale-faced young man, transformed into a driver.

Our hero is still living, surrounded by a lovely group of grand-children, and he still is firm in his own belief that he can't be fooled.

The last time we saw him he was listening to an account given by Seymour, on his return from the city, of that wonderful invention—the magnetic telegraph. 'I wonder,' says the old man, 'if Ed thinks I suck all that yarn about writing and talking by lightning, or about sending a letter from New York to Buffalo in a second! No! nor in twenty-four hours either. It's no use, Ed, you may tell that to the women folks and the children, but you can't pull the wool over my eyes again; I'm too old—I've seen too much of the world; you can't fool me!'

THE ABILITY OF COMMERCIAL NATIONS TO CARRY ON WAR. While the spirit of war, says Hunt's Merchant's Magazine, is opposed to the spirit of commerce, we must not be understood to mean that commercial nations are on that account the less capable of carrying on war. Their indisposition to war arises not from want of courage, but from a peaceable disposition and a feeling of justice. They are not led away by a love of glory or a desire for revenge. They take a business-like view of the question; they examine the debtor and the creditor side of the account, and calculate beforehand what they shall gain by fighting. But, when once compelled to draw the sword, commercial nations are foes not to be despised. Look at ancient Tyre, that for thirteen years resisted the power of Babylon, led on by Nebuchadnezzar; at new Tyre—a town built on a rock—that for seven months arrested the progress of Alexander the Great; at Carthage, that for centuries contended with the armies of martial Rome; and come to modern history, and trace the wars of Venice and Genoa, of Holland, and of England, and tell me if commercial nations have shown themselves deficient in that valor and enterprize which are the foundations of successful war. It is remarkable that the commercial city of Corinth supplied excellent military commanders, insomuch that the other states of Greece preferred Corinthian generals to natives of their own states. May we not infer from this that the commercial virtues of foresight, calculation, diligence, arrangement, and perseverance, united to a knowledge of military tactics, laid the foundation of success? But though commercial nations have been sometimes compelled to engage in war, and have generally waged it successfully, yet war is injurious to commerce.

THE SILK WEAVERS OF LYONS.

Lyons is the centre of the great silk manufacturing region of France. It has a population of nearly 200,000, swarming through the lofty, irregular houses which crowd and darken the narrow, crooked and filthy streets. The city itself, like each individual street has an air of being crowded. It looks as though it could not breath, pressed in as it is between the numerous hills which lie about the junction of the Rhone and Saone. The silk manufacture was begun here in 1540. There are no large buildings like our cotton factories where the work is carried on; everything is done in private houses. The proprietor gives out the work all prepared for weaving, and it is brought home to him when it is finished. The draughtsman, usually a minor partner, is constantly employed in getting up new patterns, and it is the special business of another artist to lay in the piece. There are in operation in and about Lyons, not less than thirty-one or two thousand silk looms, or about one to every six or eight of the population. The houses in which the work is carried on are dark, close, damp, and filthy; the living is of the poorest kind, and the whole weaving population is wretchedly depraved, both physically and morally. Of the men who are of a proper age for military service, at least one half are exempted by weakness, disease, or deformity, and the females can boast no superiority over the men.

For a few sous a day, weary and hungry, and sick, these wretched beings toil on for the decoration of those who can scarcely believe that there is such a thing as misery in the world. Since the revolution of February, the weavers have been supported by government. Beautiful velvets, that previously brought twenty-two francs a yard, have been sold as low as ten francs a yard, and the most splendid silks have been sold for a discount of more than fifty per cent. The usual meals of a common weaver at Lyons are thus stated by Dr. Bowring:

One and a half pound of bread, of excellent quality; one litre of wine. Dinner of soup, with a little meat in it. Cheese.

Rent varies from fifteen to twenty-five dollars per annum, for two or three small rooms. Many are boarded by their employers for about eleven cents per day.—Scientific American.

YOUR CHANGE, SIR!

One of those nondescript specimens of humanity, called dandies, travelling through Connecticut recently, was brought up with a 'round turn' at a toll gate, which he designed to have passed without paying the usual fee. When he found himself in limbo, from which he could not escape without 'forking over,' he inquired of a young lady who was in attendance at the gate, how much he had to pay before he could pass the formidable barrier.

'Three cents, sir, is the charge for single wagons,' replied the young lady.

'Three cents is a threepence, the half of a sixpence; one of the smallest bits of silver in use, eh! young woman—am I right?' said the dandy, feeling in his pockets for the change.

'Three cents, sir, if you please,' said the lady.

'In your office of highway*man,* young woman, you will abstract the amount of your demand from this piece, and return me the balance as conveniently quick as your ordinary locomotion will allow,' said the dandy gentleman, at the same time purposely dropping a ninepenny piece into the mud beneath his wagon. 'Ah! there it is in the mud, I declare I wouldn't dirty my fingers for twenty of them.'

The young lady took the ninepence from the mud where he had dropped it—went into the house and returned with nine cents, which she placed immediately under the wheel, where she had taken up the ninepence.

'Hillo, hilloo, young woman, what is it you mean,' said the dandy. 'Why don't you put that coin into my hand, eh?'

The girl archly replied, 'sir, I found your money under the wagon; there you will find your change;' and as she turned to go into the house, she gave the fellow a most significant smile and added, 'I wouldn't dirty my fingers for twenty of them! would you, Mr. Dandy*man*? ha. ha, ha—there's your change sir,' and she closed the door.

The gentleman dismounted, 'picked up his coppers,' and was off at full speed, impatient to get out of sight and hearing. If he should ever happen in that country again, he will take care how he makes change with Yankee girls.

CONVENTION OF LAWYERS. A meeting of the members of the Bar throughout the Commonwealth is to be held in Boston, on Thursday the 4th of January next, for the purpose of taking measures to elevate and improve the character of the Bar, by combining together to guard the profession from imposition of unworthy and pettifogging persons claiming a place among them; to raise the standard of professional education; and to promote good fellowship and kind feelings among the fraternity throughout the State. Circulars have been addressed to all the members of the Bar in Massachusetts, inviting their attendance.

TRUTH STRONGLY TOLD. Rev. Dr. Choules of Rhode Island, in a recent address remarked that 'Many parents show a disposition to raise their children to live without labor; but,' said he, 'they will raise a generation which will curse their ancestry.'

GOLD MARVELS. A letter from the Rev. Walter Colton, Alcalde of Monterey, California, appears under date of August 29th, in the Journal of Commerce, in which Mr. Colton tells some new marvels in relation to the late gold discoveries. He says:

'At present the people are running over the country and picking it out of the earth here and there, just as a thousand hogs, let loose in a forest, would root up ground nuts. Some get eight or ten ounces a day; and the least active, one or two. They make the most who employ the wild Indians to hunt it for them. There is one man who has sixty Indians in his employ—his profits are a dollar a minute. The wild Indians know nothing of its value, and wonder what the pale faces want to do with it; they will give an ounce of it for the same weight of coined silver, or a thimble full of glass beads, or a glass of grog. And white men themselves often give an ounce of it, which is worth at our mint eighteen dollars or more, for a bottle of brandy, a bottle of soda powders, or a plug of tobacco.

'As to the quantity which the diggers get, take a few facts as evidence. I know seven men who worked seven weeks and two days, Sundays excepted, on Feather river; they employed on an average fifty Indians, and got out in these seven weeks and two days, two hundred and seventy-five pounds of pure gold. I know the men and have seen the gold, and know what they state to be a fact—so stick a pin there. I know ten other men who worked ten days in company, employed no Indians, and averaged in these ten days fifteen hundred dollars each. I know another man who got out of a basin in a rock, not larger than a wash bowl, two pounds and a half of gold in fifteen minutes. Not one of these statements would I believe, did I not know the men personally, and know them to be plain matter of fact men—men who open a vein of gold just as coolly as you would open a potato hill.'

Col. Mason, the military commandant of California, says, 'There is more gold in the country drained by the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, than will pay the cost of the present war with Mexico a hundred times over. No capital is required to obtain this gold, as the laboring man wants nothing but his pick and shovel and tin pan, with which to dig and wash the gravel; and many frequently pick gold out of the crevices of rocks with their butcher knives, in pieces from one to six ounces.'

IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES. The London Gazette contains some important information for the ladies, with regard to the manner of placing their lips when they desire to look amiable, dignified, etc. It suggests that when a lady would compose her mouth to a bland and serene character, she should, just before entering the room, say Besom, and keep the expression into which the mouth subsides until the desired effect upon the company is evident. If, on the other hand, she wishes to assume a distinguished and somewhat noble bearing, not suggestive of sweetness, she should say Brush, the result of which if infallible. If she would make her mouth small and pretty, she must say Flip, but if the mouth be already too small, and needs enlarging, she must say Cabbage. Ladies, when having their dagueerreotypes taken, may observe these rules with some advantage.

ALUM. The uses of alum are manifold and important: incorporated with paper, it presents a hard, smooth surface, fit for writing upon; furriers employ it in the preservation of the hairy covering of skins; it retards putrefaction in animal substances; and hardens the tallow used for candles. Its astringent properties, are valued in medicine, and its caustic properties, as calcined alum in surgery. But it is in dyeing that the use of alum is most important and most widely diffused. It is rare that coloring matters present any affinity for the substances to be dyed; most of them would disappear with the first washing, were there no medium by which they could be fixed. The substance employed for this purpose is called a mordant or biter-in; and in this respect alum holds a pre-eminent rank. This mineral is also made subservient to other less praiseworthy purposes; bakers use it to give a good color to bad flour, and to swell a comparatively small lump of dough into a large loaf; iced ginger-beer and lemonade offered for sale at railway stations and other places, if narrowly inspected, will often be found imbedded in lumps of alum, which pass very well for ice.

INTONATIONS OF THE CHINESE. It is ascertained that a great difficulty in acquiring the spoken language of the Chinese consists in tones and aspirates, by which the same word, in some cases, has five, ten, or more distinct meanings. These intonations must first be learned by a foreigner who would acquire the language, or he will be liable to make the most lamentable mistakes in speaking. An illustration is given in the word Pang, which has five distinct aspirates, or breathings, and five different labial sounds; and according as thus pronounced has the ten different meanings, 'to help; a bee; to bind; to spin; to let go; corpulent; a room; a sail; a club; a seam.'

EXTRAORDINARY TELEGRAPHIC FEAT. President Polk's cumbrous message, containing upwards of fifteen thousand words, (!) was flashed all the way from Baltimore to St. Louis in twenty-four hours, and this too with the minutest punctuation mark in the document.

"STIR 'EM UP WITH A LONG POLE." An exchange gives the following touching harangue delivered in a great menagerie scene :—"This, ladies and gentlemen, is the natural kangaroo—the animal what approaches to man second only to the baboon. It skips about with much velocity on its hind legs, of which it has two from rock to rock. It would be much more like man if it hadn't a tail—but this defect it remedies with much art. It curls it gently into its waistcoat pocket, and nobody is any the wiser. It feeds principally upon what he can get, and is found in the island of Borneo, which I have a brother who was born there myself. My brother has often seen the kangaroos as well as myself feeding upon clams by the sea shore, admiring the sweetness of the meat and shaving themselves with the shells. The kangaroo is remarkable for his valise, which is a natual decavity in his abdomen into which he puts his kittens, and is exceedingly portable. These are the guinea pigs, from the island of Guinea; they are as yellow as guineas, and cost one guinea a-piece."

THE MOTIVE. What causes young people to "come out" but the noble ambition of matrimony? What sends them trooping to watering places? What keeps them dancing till five o'clock in the morning through a whole mortal season? What causes them to labor at pianoforte sonatas, and to learn four songs from a master at an eagle a lesson, and to play the harp if they have handsome arms and neat elbows but that they may bring down some "desirable "young man with those killing bows and and arrows of theirs? What causes respectable parents to take up their carpets, set their house topsy-turvy, and spend a fifth of their year's income in ball-suppers and iced champagne? Is it the sheer love of their species, an unadulterated wish to see young people happy and dancing? Pshaw! they only want to marry their daughters.

A JEWEL OF A WOMAN. We saw a lady at Strakosch's great Concert on Saturday evening last who had nineteen rings upon her fingers and thirteen bracelets of different descriptions upon her arms, which were bare to the shoulders and very handsome. Her hands were small, white and beautiful. Some of the rings contained diamonds of large size, and whenever she moved her hand it appeared to be in a blaze of light. This gaily-decked lady was a subject of admiration to some and envy to others, and of pity to a few. Her fan was expensive, and was secured to her wrist by a heavy gold chain. She wore ear-rings and a breast pin. Altogether she presented the appearance of a walking jewelry store, and as such we regarded her as the most valuable woman literally speaking, that we have seen.—Philadelphia City Item.

ANECDOTE OF DR. BEECHER. As the Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher was going home one night, carrying a volume of an encyclopedia under his arm, he saw a small animal standing in his path. The Doctor knew that it was a skunk, but very imprudently hurled the book at him. Whereupon the skunk opened his battery with a return fire so well directed that the Doctor was glad to retreat. When he arrived at home, his friends could scarcely come near him. His clothes were so infected that he was obliged to bury them. Some time after this, one of Dr. Beecher's enemies published a pamphlet speaking very abusively of him. "Why don't you publish a book, and put him down at once," said one of his advisers. "Some years ago I issued a whole quarto volume against a skunk, and I got the worst of it. I never mean to try the experiment again."

SERVANTS AT THE WEST. Grace Greenwood gives a spicy description of domestic servants west of the Alleghanies. She says, "I can give you no idea of the independence, the regal dignity of the few who occasionally deign to take service in private families. We once engaged a damsel in the capacity of housemaid, who disappointed us at the time fixed for her arrival, giving as her only reason for not honoring my mother with her assistance, that she had 'heard Mrs. —— had two grown up gals, able to work themselves, that was sassy to help.'"

CHANGES IN MAN'S LIFE. About five years ago, says an exchange, we saw a man light his cigar with a twenty dollar bank note. At that time he was full of life, and in the possession of real estate valued at eighty thousand dollars. Alas! what changes doth Time make—on Saturday last this foolish man was seen begging alms in our public streets. He looked wretched, was ghastly pale, and miserably clad.

CHLOROFORM A CURE FOR CHOLERA. Dr. James Hill, resident surgeon at the Packham House Asylum, (England) states that he has tried chloroform in ten cases of malignant Cholera, with complete success; six of the patients having recovered, and four being convalescent.

POSTAGE. Some of the most prominent recommendations in the Postmaster General's report, are—to make the rate of postage uniform for letters at five cents the half-ounce; for newspapers one cent the ounce; for periodicals two cents the ounce; and for foreign letters fifteen cents the half-ounce; the total abolition of the franking privilege; the prepayment of all mail matter.

A stone cutter's wages in Paris are 72 to 90 cents per diem. Mason's from 57 to 72. Common laborers 36 to 43 cents.

The foundations of knowledge and virtue are laid in our youth; if at any other time, the structure must be insecure and imperfect.

THINGS LOST FOREVER. Lost wealth may be restored by industry—the wreck of health by temperance—alienated friendship soothed into forgetfulness—even forfeited reputation won by patience and virtue. But who ever again looked on his vanished hours—recalled his slighted years,—stamped them with wisdom—or effaced from Heaven's record the fearful blot of wasted life.—Boston Bee.

AQUATIC. A celebrated India rubber firm of New York have recently "fixed up" a contrivance which will enable a man to fling himself into the river with perfect impunity,—and float there too as pleasantly as he likes, and as long as he chooses—only using his digits for propulsion whithersoever he lists.

CALIFORNIA. The price of a passage to California is as follows: To Chagres $80, thence to Panama $20, thence by steamer to San Francisco from $160 to $200.

A package containing nine thousand two hundred dollars in bank notes, addressed to the Bank of Commerce, New York, by the Merchants Bank, Providence, was recently stolen on the route between Providence and New York.

NEW YORK OYSTERS. "Yankee Seth of the Palo Alto Saloon," Long Harrison of the Buena Vista Restorator," and Major George of the Hancock House, have each just received a supply of New York Oysters, which they will be happy to serve in epecurian style to their customers. A general rush is anticipated this evening, when each caterer will exert his "genius." The oysters are fat and delicious—so all partakers will exclaim.

LADIES' EXCHANGE. We have neglected to call attention to the advertisement of Geo. W. Warren & Co., Boston. It will be seen that they offer great inducements to purchasers of Dry Goods, and the well known reputation of this firm for superior goods and low prices should secure for them extensive sales. Ladies, be sure and give them a call when you visit the city.

CONGRESS. A bill has been introduced for admitting California as a state. A petition has been received from citizens of New Mexico praying for a territorial government, and protesting against the establishment of slavery. This caused a warm discussion. A resolution instructing the Committee of Way and Means to report a bill based upon the Tariff of 1842, has been decided in the affirmative.

BROWN'S ALMANAC. We have received a copy of this pocket almanac for 1849. Besides the usual matter, there are blank pages, regularly divided, for every day in the year. This is very convenient for general use, as you can thus note things of importance as they occur. Its merits and adaptation should ensure an increased sale for the twelfth year of the publication. For sale at the Quincy Bookstore.

ACQUITTED. The trial of John Cook, Jr, charged with poisoning his wife at Ashburnham fifteen years ago, was concluded on Saturday at Worcester. After being out about half an hour, the jury came in with a verdict of "not guilty," and Mr. Cook was discharged, after an imprisonment of one year.

FOREFATHER'S DAY. The anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims is to be celebrated in Plymouth on the 22d. An address will be delivered, the Standish Guards will parade, and there will be a grand military and fancy ball in the evening.

ROBBERY. The shop of Nathan H. White in this town, was entered last Monday night and several articles stolen. Another shop was also entered the same evening and several pairs of boots taken.

SUBJECT FOR REFLECTION. It is stated that the segars smoked in the United States amount to $10,000,000 annually. This expense, great as it is, is incurred by boys and young men principally, and would support fifty thousand of their number in the process of obtaining a liberal education, at $300 per annum.

MUNICIPAL ELECTION. The annual election for city officers, took place in Boston last Monday, and resulted in the choice of the whig candidate for Mayor, Hon. J. P. Bigelow, a board of whig aldermen, and forty-two whig councilmen, five democrats, and there is one vacancy in ward 12.

CLOSE WORK. Prof. Bond says that the comet, on the last day of this year will cross the orbit of the earth, at a point where the earth was on the 28th October. Had the comet been two months more advanced in its orbit, a very near approach to, or even a collision with the earth, would have taken place.

MEXICO. Dates from Tampico to the 23d ult., state that eight hundred troops of the national government were still in the vicinity of that city, but the possession of the town remained with the national guards. Advices from the capital of the 6th ult., announce the termination of the session of congress. There was no general news of importance.

SERIOUS AFFRAY. On Monday afternoon last an affray occurred at a notorious bar-room in Haskin's Building, corner of Court and Howard streets, Boston, known as the "Verandah," between Benjamin Jordan and some half dozen others, which ended in Jordan's being most brutally beaten. The parties engaged in the affray were more or less scarred and bruised by blows from their opponents. Two of the party were arrested by the police.

BOSTON ALMANAC. This invaluable of all Almanacs has been published, so says Gill of the Quincy Bookstore, where it may be found for sale—this evening.

A MODEL MESSAGE. Gov. Williams comprises all he has to say to the New Hampshire Legislature in a short newspaper column—confining himself entirely to State affairs.

Rev. Otis A. Skinner, pastor of the Orchard street Universalist Society, New York, has accepted the invitation of the Fifth Universalist Society in Boston, where he was formerly settled, to become their pastor.

MARRIED.

In this town, 10th inst., by Rev. Mr. Lunt, Mr Jerome Hersey to Miss Eunice M., daughter of Mr. John Pierce.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

BRYANT NEWCOMB.

Incidents in the life of Mr. Bryant Newcomb of Braintree, who died Nov. 30th, aged 87 years and 1 month

Mr. Newcomb was born at Braintree, Oct. 25th, 1761. At the commencement of the Revolution he was in his fourteenth year, yet young as he was he fully appreciated the right and justice of the American cause. His youthful mind was inspired with an ardent and patriotic love for his country. He shared in the glory, and endured the sufferings, attendant upon that long and glorious struggle for the rights of man. Frequently have I listened to his recitals of the scenes of joy and woe, pleasure and pain, suffering and want, that he passed through in that eventful period.

His father, Capt. Thomas Newcomb, was the grandchild of Francis Newcomb, who came from Oxford County, England. He was a brave and worthy man. He served throughout the revolutionary struggle, first as Lieutenant, afterwards as Captain, of an artillery company. When the news came of the battle at Lexington, it found him as it did General Putnam, at work upon his farm; like him, also, he left his plough in the furrow and quickly hastened to the scene of action. As he was leaving his home, his wife asked him (it being near dinner time) if he was not going to eat dinner first. No, said he, if we tarry a moment we know not whom it may cause to loose his dinner to-morrow. It was such self-denying and patriotic examples as these that the son had to imitate and to inspire his youthful mind. That they were not forgotten the sequel will show. He accompanied his father and became in due time a gunner in the same company of which his father had command. While the British had the possession of Boston, Captain Newcomb was stationed, first at Quincy Great Hill, then at Nantasket. Afterwards he was engaged in several of the battles and skirmishes that occurred in Rhode Island and Connecticut. It was at the battle of Newport that the young gunner had the honor of discharging the first gun. This I have heard my grand-father relate with a feeling of pride and satisfaction, and with such an air and manner that it always reminded me of the following lines of Goldsmith—

"Sat by his fire, and talked the night away;
Wept o'er his wounds, or tales of sorrow done,
Shouldered his crutch, and showed how fields were won."

In the autumn of 1780, the rigors and hardships of the camp proved too much even for the robust and hale constitution of the youth. He was taken sick and sent home. This event produced an entire change in his future life. On his recovery to health he, together with Job Field, Lemuel Clark, Samuel Curtis, Edward Savil, Josiah Bass, Thomas Vinton, James Bass (colored,) Gregory Clark and Lewis Glover, all of Braintree, shipped on board of a Privateer of twenty guns, called the Essex. This vessel belonged to Salem and sailed sometime in the month of April, 1781. Her officers consisted of Capt. John Heitheart, 1st Lieut. Thayer, 2d Lieut. Lovell and 3d Lieut. Pilsbury. Her crew numbered one hundred and thirty men and boys. They sailed in fine spirits and directed their course across the Atlantic with the intention of securing rich prizes along the coast of England and Ireland. On their way they captured a small English store ship, which, after supplying themselves with such articles of her cargo as they thought might be necessary for their present and future wants, they manned and sent off to one of the American ports. This ship was afterwards, I believe, retaken. This successful adventure elevated their hopes and they proceeded on with joy. But, alas! they were soon doomed to disappointment, for scarcely had they reached the coast of Ireland before they were taken by his Majesty's ship the Queen Charlotte, a frigate of thirty six guns, Capt. King commander. They were captured on the 4th day of June, 1781, conveyed to Ireland and committed to prison. The high hopes and bright visions with which they commenced their adventurous voyage were now blasted. Instead of great bounties and rich luxuries which they fancied awaited them, they now saw nothing before them but penury, suffering and want. At the expiration of twelve days they were taken from the prison in Ireland, and once more conveyed on board of the frigate, put in irons and confined between decks to await the readiness of the Cartel or transport ship to carry them to England. Newcomb and Field were ironed together. They contrived to secrete about their persons a lot of ship bread and two bottles of wine, which rendered their unpleasant quarters a little more tolerable. The Cartel took them to Portsmouth, then they were placed on board of a guard ship. Here they were kept some time and then taken to Plymouth and carried before the Court for examination. They were condemned for piracy and high treason and committed to the Mill Prison.

Previous to their condemnation they had been frequently importuned by the king's officers to enlist in the British service. All these importunities had been firmly resisted. The Judges now tried their powers of entreaty. The prisoners were admitted into the Court two by two. Newcomb and Field stood before it. The usual questions having been gone through and the sentence of condemnation pronounced, when the Judge thus addressed them: "I am empowered to give advice to young men like you and to offer you in the name of his Majesty, Pardon—on the condition that you enter our service. You shall be used well and shall receive the regular pay. Remember that you have taken up arms against your mother country, and have been found guilty of one of the highest of crimes. I would entreat you to accept the conditions and receive the pardon. I advise you as I would my own sons." He then took out his watch and gave them ten minutes to decide. This last act was unnecessary. There was no question for them to decide, their determination was fixed, their minds were firm. No inducements nor entreaties, no promises nor bribes could swerve them from the path of duty. Notwithstanding they had already suffered much, and their future prospects looked dark and gloomy, yet they preferred to endure it all, aye, even death itself rather than to sacrifice one jot or tittle of their patriotism. Their answer was—"Pardon or no pardon, we will not enter into any service that will require us to act in opposition to our own country."

Thir emphatic answer at once changed the paternal tone and manner of the Judge to that of haughtiness and severity. He peremptorily ordered them away to the prison. It was about the first of September when they entered the prison, and they remained therein about seven months. Many were the sufferings, privations and hardships they were called to endure. All communication from without was denied except through the officers of the prison. Their fare was coarse and hard. Yet their courage and hopes never failed them. They looked forward with the eye of faith for better times. They bore with patience their present sufferings in glorious anticipations of brighter days. No discipline or prison regulations could restrain them, however, from giving vent to their feelings on the reception of any favorable news from home. They had secret and unknown friends without the prison, who would manage to give them a knowledge of passing events. One morning about the first of November, a large frigate was seen entering the harbor. News from home said they, and every one felt anxious to know what it might be. "Cornwallis is taken," said Newcomb. Do you not see how sad and dejected the British officers look and appear, their faces are as long as your arm." But no satisfactory answer to their questions could be obtained. By and by an old boot was seen flying in the air. It fell within the walls. A dozen hands were immediately ready to receive it. In the boot was a paper, which revealed to them the glorious news that Cornwallis, with his whole army, was taken. This was too good news to let pass in silence. They gave three cheers, and at the same time the American colors were hoisted, which they had made out of red and white cloth. For this show of their rebel spirit, the leaders were put under guard, Newcomb among the rest. The flag was quickly pulled down, or worse consequences would have followed.

Many and various were the ways and means resorted to to while away the tedious hours of confinement. Some of them quite laudable and praiseworthy. The Yankee school master was there, and all who could furnish half a penny a day as tuition fee could enjoy the privelege of his school. The Methodist preacher was there, who officiated regularly every Sunday. These schools and meetings served to make their situation less irksome, by keeping the mind employed upon useful topics. I have often heard my Grandfather speak of the satisfaction and pleasure they afforded him.

Newcomb, Field and Savil had written a letter to John Adams, who was at that time in Amsterdam, acquainting him of their situation and requesting his intercession in their behalf. The result of this communication was made known to them as follows:—One morning in March, 1782, Henry Laurens was admitted into the prison in company with one of the officers. This Mr. Laurens succeeded John Hancock as president of the Continental Congress, and was afterwards chosen by Congress, to go to Holland to solicit a loan and to negotiate a treaty with the United Netherlands. On his passage he was captured by a British vessel, and sent to England. He was committed to the Tower as a state prisoner on the charge of high treason. He was kept in the Tower about 18 months, and from which he had been but recently liberated when he visited the Mill prison. The prisoners all gathered around him. He made a short speech, full of sympathy and consolation. At the close of which he called for Newcomb, Field and Savil and informed them that Mr. Adams had received their letters, and had made arrangements for their liberation, and in a few days they would hear from him direct.

In about three weeks from that time the happy day arrived. They received the expected letter from Mr. Adams, and with it five guineas each. They went to France in a Cattel, and travelled several hundred miles in that country. It was some months before they succeeded in getting a passage home. They shipped on board of a brig bound to Philadelphia. On entering the Delaware bay, word was sent off from the shore that the river was blockaded by the enemy. The brig was run ashore, the cargo immediately discharged and carried into the woods. Shortly after an English ship hove in sight, and discharged a volley of hot shot, one of which set the brig on fire and she was burnt. Having succeeded in getting their wages, they left for home, walking all the way, when they arrived safely on the 16th of October, 1782.

Such are some of the most prominent events that characterized his early life. He was now twenty-one years old, without any trade or profession, and not worth the value of a dollar. But his was a mind not to yield to despondency. The same fortitude now urged him on, which had already sustained him through his many trials. He served as an apprentice for six months, with his brother and then established himself in the shoe business. Having manufactured several pairs, he took them upon his back and walked to Boston, sold them, bought his stock and returned. This he continued to do until he was able to purchase a horse, then he went on horse-back with panniers. In a short time he was able to get a wagon, or rather an apology for one, for it consisted only of the wheels with boards nailed upon the axles. In a few years however he succeeded in procuring one, more substantial and better finished. He kept his stand for the sale of his shoes near Dock Square and would generally sell his load in one day. He continued in this business about twenty years. He then entered into the stone business and was engaged in that about the same length of time. He was one of the first to commence in the stone business, which has proved such a source of income and profit to many.

He married at the age of twenty-two years, Miss Jane Glover, with whom he lived sixty-two years. (She having died four years ago.) By this union he became the father of nine children, eight of whom are still living and have families, so that his descendants in children, grand-children, great-grand-children, and great-great-grand-children, will number upwards of 150.

Mr. Newcomb had many excellent traits of character. His home was a happy home. As a husband he was kind and good, as a father fond and affectionate—as a neighbor, generous and benevolent. As a business man he possessed every requisite virtue, which together with his economical, frugal and temperate habits, enabled him to accumulate quite a handsome fortune.

He received a pension from the government for many years. This was a great source of gratification and pleasure to him. He would often speak of his pension money, as the price of his youthful labors in his country's cause, and as he thought of the past, and then contemplated upon the present prosperous and happy condition of his country, it would reanimate his whole soul with joy and thanksgiving

His work is finished. He has gone, full of years, to his final rest. And we can well say with the poet:—

Why mourn ye that our aged friend is dead?
Ye are not sad to see the gathered grain.
Nor when their mellow fruit the orchards cast,
Nor when the yellow woods shake down the ripened mast.
Ye sigh not when the sun his course fulfilled
His glorious course, rejoicing earth and sky,
In the soft evening when the winds are chilled,
Sinks where his islands of refreshment lie,
And leaves the smile of his departure spread
O'er the warm colored heaven and ruddy mountain head.
Why weep ye then for him who having run
The bound of man's appointed years, at last,
Life's blessings all enjoyed, life's labors done,
Serenely to his final rest has passed;
While the soft memory of his virtues, yet
Lingers like twilight hues when the bright sun is set?

ONE OF THE DESCENDANTS.

John B. Floyd, Democrat, was chosen Governor of Virginia, on the 12th inst, by the Legislature, on the third ballot.

Rufus Choate of Mass., and Gideon Hawley of New York, have been re-appointed Regents of the Smithsonian Institute.

France has placed three armed vessels at the disposal of the Government of Liberia, to assist in the suppression of the slave trade and protect the commonwealth.

The Dead Sea Expedition arrived at Norfolk last week from Gibraltar.

The number of dwelling houses in Boston, into which the Cochituate water had been introduced, up to Saturday last, was 4305.

Counterfeits have been offered on the Adams Bank; New Hampshire Manufacturers' Bank, Ware; also altered bills on the Quincy Stone Bank.

The only Sabbath mail running at present in the New England states, is between Portland and Calais, Maine.

General Taylor has visited the High School for girls at New Orleans. He made a very pretty speech to the girls, and before he left was very severely kissed.

Rev. Thomas Starr King, (late Minister of the Universalist Society in Charlestown,) was installed as Pastor of the Hollis Street Society in Boston, last week.

The mother-in-law, sister-in-law and a brother-in-law of Santa Anna, recently arrived at New Orleans from Vera Cruz, en route for Havana, and thence to Jamacia.

The City Government of Boston have issued orders for a thorough cleansing of the city, which they justly consider as one of the most effectual measures to prevent the spread there of the Asiatic Cholera.

Gen. Taylor has sent in his resignation as Major-General commanding the Western Division of our army, and that it will take effect after the 1st of February next.

The California Gold, at the Philadelphia Mint, is declared to be genuine.

A sure cure for Dyspepsia and Costiveness.

HARRISON'S PERISTALTICS have had 12 years' trial by the Medical faculty and the public generally. This medicine is in Lozenges, pleasant to the taste, and may be given to children. The Peristaltics are gently laxative, and by their tonic qualities improve the digestive organs and invigorate the whole system. They cure Costiveness, Headache, Dizziness, Sleepiness, Jaundice, Oppression after Eating, Liver Complaint, Diarrhœa, Piles, Dropsy, Debility, Faintness, Weak Stomach, Heartburn, Palpitation, Rheumatism, Pains in the Bones, Scrofula, Tic Douleureux, Worms, etc, etc.

These Lozenges are excellent in all Nervous complaints and Dyspeptic symptoms, Female Suppressions and Irregularities, especially in the young. This medicine contains no preparation of Mercury whatever, and no ingredient which may not safely be given to the most delicate female and under any circumstances.

This preparation is also put up in bottles for seafaring persons, who should always have a supply. An occasional use of the Peristaltics prevents Fevers, Bilious complaints, and chronic or East India Diarrhœa. They are admirably adapted to the complaints incident to the coast of Africa, Sumatra, West Indies and South America.

These Lozenges are recommended by some of the best Physicians in Boston, who use them in their families and general practice. All afflicted with oppression after eating, or rising of food will find great relief. They are the best medicine for children known.

Valuable Testimony from the South.

We like, at all times, to give credit when credit is due, and if at the same time we can relieve the distressed, we are doubly gratified; we, therefore, give the following voluntary testimony as to the beneficial effects of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, by the editor of the Columbia South Carolinian, who appears to have obtained great relief by its use.—Old Dominion, Portsmouth, Va.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

We seldom resort to patent medicines, having a great respect for the skill of the regular profession, but chance threw into our way the above named medicine, immediately after the close of the last session of the Legislature, when our lungs were almost dried up by the highly rarified atmosphere of our stove warmed State House. The Balsam immediately relieved us of a most harrassing cough, which threatened our health in a serious degree. We feel that we are indebted to it for some fifteen pounds of animal weight—which addition once FELT, cannot be forgotten.

None genuine unless signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper.

The large sale of Brown's Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters, is another proof of its efficacy. It is now about three years since it was first offered to the public, although it has been used by one of the most distinguished physicians for many years in private practice; since which the sale has steadily increased, and it has been sent for from all parts of the country, where it was never advertised, but recommended by persons that have used it. It has been shipped to foreign ports, and found ready sale: that alone would seem to be proof enough of its utility.

How many medicines there are advertised that never sell, and soon go down and are forgotten! How different it is with this? It finds a ready sale where it has never been advertised; and its sale continues to increase in all places as it becomes known.

Also, we have (and this will be particularly pleasing to the younger portion of the community) taken especial care to provide ourselves with nearly an entire new collection of

JUVENILE AND TOY BOOKS.

In this department we have always been able to give satisfaction, but we shall present UNUSUAL ATTRACTION this season, having disposed of much of our old stock and replenished with that which is new and beautiful. We trust that all who have young friends whom they are desirous to please will duly notice this.

We are also provided with a large assortment of BIBLES, some in new styles of binding, appropriate to the season,

MINIATURE VOLUMES OF POEMS, &c.,

in almost endless variety, with a general assortment of

BEAUTIFULLY BOUND & ILLUSTRATED BOOKS,

in the various departments of literature.

Our stock of FANCY GOODS, TOYS, &c., has been enlarged by recent purchases, embracing many articles new, beautiful and appropriate.

All we ask of those who are desirous of obtaining something for a memento or love token, on this occasion, is this—that they will favor us with a call, and if they really wish to purchase, the fault will not be ours if they do not, most entirely to their satisfaction.

POETRY.

HEIGHO! THIS WORLD BELOW.

Heigho! heigho! this world below
Is good enough for those who love it,
And honest—if you make it so,
And friendly—if you never prove it.
Whate'er we do, to help us still
Are strong arms—if we never take them,
And purses ready at our will,
To aid us—if we never ask them.

Heigho! heigho! this world below
I grant you is a world of pleasure,
With streams of bliss, whose currants flow
Unending—if we never measure;
And mortals love each other too,
They tell us, if we would but heed it,
And always ready are to do
Some kindness—if we never need it.

Heigho! heigho! this world below
Is full of all that's good and glorious,
And always liberal too we know,
Not narrow minded or censorious.
And it has many a favorite, who
Has passed his life without a mischance
Who's great and noble, kind and true—
If we but view him in the distance.

Heigho! heigho! this world below
Is never lacking in professions,
Though often times it may be slow
In self denials or concessions;
So kindly too it always tries
To mind our business, if we'll let it,
It ever brings unto our eyes
The past, for fear we should forget it.

Heigho! heigho! this world below
Rules lightly, if we would obey it,
And what the crowd is prattling so,
Is true, or else why would it say it.
Its gossips always speak their minds
With honest frankness and with candor,
Though he who listens, often finds
A something, very much like slander.

Heigho! heigho! this world below
Is fair enough when we look on it,
And always truest proves I know
To those whose trust is least upon it—
'Tis like a lemon on the tree—
With all the pretty things that grace it,
Bright, beautiful and fair to see—
And very pleasant—till you taste it.

Heigho! heigho! this world below
Is after all as mortals make it,
And always best to those who go
Straight through, and as they find it, take it!
And if it fickle prove at last—
And cheat us, what's the use of sighing?
But let us, what we have, hold fast,
And what we lack, make up in trying.

SPIRIT GUESTS.

There are shadows flitting, flitting
O'er the sunlight of this heart,
In their wildness ever fitting
To the outward counterpart;
Darting dreams of proud ambition,
Darkened by the flight of years;
Moments joyous in fruition,
Yielding to an age of tears.

There are whispers thrilling, thrilling
All this anxious, eager soul,
With a strange, sweet impulse filling
Till it brooks not my control;
Whispers of the pure and holy
Calling to a far-off shore,
Where the shade of melancholy
Flits across this soul no more.

There is music stealing, stealing
From the flowret's trembling bell,
Soft its vesper chimes are pealing
In the spirit's cloistered cell;
'Tis the hour of sweet devotion;
Hence unhallowed doubts and fears!
Grief is ours on life's dark ocean,
But the haven hath no tears.

There are visions cheering, cheering
As the chilling shadows creep,
At the twilight hours appearing
When the heart is prone to weep;
Visions varied, truthful, tender,
O'er the spirit clouds they rise,
Hallowed by a dreamy splendor,
Gathered only from the skies!

ANECDOTES.

'John, who was the wisest man?
'Don't know, sir.'
'Yes you do know, too; tell me.'
'Wall, I guess it was uncle Zeke, for father says he was so cunning that he got everybody to trust him, and wasn't fool enough to pay nobody.'

A man was once travelling in Ireland, when he found lying asleep in the road, another who had by his side what he supposed was a mail bag. He awoke the sleeping Mercury, and said to him 'you're a pretty fellow to carry the mail.' 'Oh,' said the other, 'I don't carry the mail—I'm an Express.'

A gentleman was once walking with Handle, the composer, and upon hearing music which he could not understand, observed to Handel, 'This is d—d stuff!' 'It may be d—d stuff, but it is mine,' rejoined Handel.

Charles the Bald allowed one, whose name was Scottus, to sit at the table with him, for his pleasure. Scottus sat on the other side of the table. One time the king being merry with him, said to him, 'What is there between Scott and sot?' Scottus answered, 'The table only.'

'Are you in fun or in earnest?' said a fellow to one who was giving him some smart cuts with a cowskin. 'I'm in earnest,' replied the other, laying on harder. 'I'm glad of it,' said the first one, 'for I don't like such fun.'

There's no mistake about it.
What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.
A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.
Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it:
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.
RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

The original and genuine article is prepared only by EMERY SOUTHER, and is highly recommended as a safe and speedy cure for all
Diseases of the Blood,
such as Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, all eruptions on the surface of the body, and Scrofula, in all its forms. This medicine will stand the test of all other Sarsaparillas. It is recommended and used by Boston Physicians of the highest respectability, and by many who have been afflicted in this city and country, who will testify to its power and efficacy in curing the various diseases of the blood, and to prevent fraud it has been entered according to Act of Congress in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.
Also—Prepared as above, the celebrated
Dandelion Panacea,
an excellent Spring Physic, and has been long used with great success in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Headache, Drowsiness and general Debility of the System, and for many years known as the best antibilious remedy on record.
Oleum Jecoris Aselli,
Or Purified Cod Liver Oil,
For Coughs, Bronchetis, etc, and all diseases of the Lungs, for the purity and efficacy of which, I would refer to the Boston MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL of February, 1848.
The afflicted may have great confidence in these articles as they are prepared with great care by the subscriber, who is a regular established apothecary in Boston, and has had long experience in compounding various medical preparations.

The Graefenberg Company,
HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No. 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES
Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:
THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc, etc, yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are sovereign. Price 25 cents per box.
The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.
THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.
The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.
The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.
The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

WILL BLOCK.

'But the creed of a sailor still further extends;
He believes 'tis his duty likewise
To comfort his poor distress'd messmates and friends,
And the girl that is faithful to prize.'

It was on the afternoon of a lovely day in summer, a veteran tar came whistling through the narrow lane that cuts off a considerable portion of the main road between Plymouth and Exeter, and shortens the journey to the weary traveller. There was something in his whole appearance so peculiarly interesting and neat, that the passenger, after receiving his 'what cheer!' could not refrain from turning round and stopping to take another look. Indeed that sparkling eye of good humor and pleasantry, that countenance, displaying at once the generous benevolence of his heart, was not easily passed by unnoticed, or readily forgotten. His dress consisted of a blue jacket and white trousers, a straw hat, bound with black ribbon, thrown carelessly back upon his head, so as to display the straggling locks of silvered grey that flowed beneath, and a black silk handkerchief loosely knotted round his neck, over which lay the white collar of his shirt; a short cudgel was tucked under his arm. He had now reached the inn by the wayside, where he proposed heaving to, to hoist in a fresh supply of grog and biscuit for the voyage. Crossing the threshold, and entering the passage, his ears were saluted with vile discordant sounds of some one in a terrible passion. 'Never throw hot water and ashes to the windward,' says the old tar, shortening sail; 'I'd sooner engage in a squadron of fire-ships than one woman in a rage. They're sure to have the last broadside, even while sinking.' He was putting about to stand off again, when a sweet voice, in plaintive supplication, struck upon his heart, and brought him up. 'Twas in reply to the vociferations of the termagant and he remained backing and filling in the passage.

'What, money—clothes—all lost, did you say?' exclaimed a rough strained throat, something resembling the combined noise of a blacksmith's bellows and a flint mill? 'All gone, eh?' 'Yes, ma'am—all lost to me,' replied a female, in tones which would have excited pity in any heart that claimed the smallest acquaintance with humanity. 'So you think that story will do, eh?' continued the first; 'twont tho', missus, so you must tramp. I don't keep a house for vagrums, and sich like.' 'Indeed, indeed, 'tis true; the villains robbed me of all, and I have walked many, many weary miles. Oh, but for a piece of bread,—a little cold water!—can you deny this? Indeed I've not been used to beg.' 'Why, that's the way with all you canting creatures—all ladies, forsooth! Where do you come from?' 'Oh, ma'am, I am a wretched girl, yet I was once happy; sorrow has indeed reached me—lost, lost Lucy!' 'Ha, I see how it is! What, you have been with the fellows, have you? Why, you good for nothing?—there, get out of my house, get out, I say!' 'Can you have the cruelty to let me perish? Where—where shall I find compassion if my own sex refuse it? Oh remember that mercy—that pity is the attribute of angels!' 'Don't talk to me of angels, hussy, and as for tributes, there's sesses, and taxes, and poor's rates enough—out I say! What, you won't, eh? Here, John! Bet! where are you all, you pack of idle vagabonds! Here, take this miss, and turn her out.' 'Oh, let me implore your pity; here humbly let me beg.—

This was too much for our honest tar. Entering the kitchen, he beheld a young girl, plainly, but neatly dressed, on her knees before an old woman. The tears were running down her pale face, and she seemed fainting with fatigue and grief, while a man grasped

'Yo ho, what's the matter here?' said the veteran, flinging the man to the opposite side of the room, and giving the boy a trip that laid him sprawling on the other; 'Cowardly, lubberly rascals! what, grapple a vessel in distress! And you (turning to the landlady) to stand looking on! Is this a christian country? For shame, old woman!' 'Old woman, forsooth!' exclaimed the now doubly exasperated landlady. 'Old woman, forsooth! What, you take the part of the young un, eh? But she shall budge directly.' 'I say she shant, then. Come here, pretty one, and nobody shall harm you while old Will Block can keep the weather-ergage.' 'Well, this is fine treatment too, in my own house! And you, ye rapscallions, who eat my victuals and take my wages, to see it tamely! Lay hold of her, I say.' 'Touch her if you dare,' says old Will, flourishing his stick, 'and I'll—I'll ——Ay, that's right, keep off, for if you come athwart my hawse, blow my wig but I'll cut your cables!' Poor Lucy had got close to his side; but fearing her protector would be injured for his generosity, she entreated him to desist. 'I am not worthy your notice, sir; only a drop of water, for I am very faint.'

'Shall have the best the house affords, while I have a shot in the locker. Go along, old Mother Squeeze-lemon, and get something for the poor child; don't you see she's all becalmed?' 'What, give my property to vagrums and wenches!—not I indeed! Will you pay the reckoning?' 'Avast, old Grampus! think of this here when you stands at another bar, and the last great reckoning comes—how will you look then? This will stand a black account against you, and what'll you have to rub it off with, eh? Go, get her a glass of wine.' 'And who's to pay? Wine indeed!—get her some water, Jack,' said the now alarmed landlady, for Will's reflection, and the solemn manner in which it was uttered, operated powerfully on her conscience. 'Heave to, you porpoise faced swab—none of your water; get us some wine, and the best in the house too, d'ye hear? Why, what's the lubber grinning at? Will this satisfy you, ye old she shark?' thrusting his hand into his jacket pocket, and drawing it out again filled with gold—'will this satisfy you?' The landlady's countenance brightened up; 'Why if so be as how you means to pay for it, that's another thing. Well, well, I dare say you're a gentleman, after all. Come, child, (to Lucy) I am sorry I was so harsh, but it's only my way. There, run, John, and fetch a bottle of the best wine, and some of those nice cakes—Stop, John, stop. I'll go myself for the poor dear.' 'Ha, ha, ha! what a generous heart!' cried Will; 'how it expands at the voice of distress!' shaking his pockets. 'Here's the key that will unlock the floodgates of her benevolence at any time, (holding up a guinea.) but come, pretty one,' drawing a chair, 'sit down and rest.'

'Oh, sir, how shall I ever repay your bounty?' said Lucy. 'Wait till I ax you,' replied Will, who felt hurt at the idea of being repaid. 'Here, miss,' said the landlady, entering, 'take this nice cake and wine, it will do you good. God bless your sweet face? why, do you think that I would go for to hurt a hair of your head?' 'There, there, there's enough of it, no more palaver; I arn't agreed for that, you know, though I spose you'll consider it in the bill.' Luckily at this moment, to prevent the gathering storm, the bell rung violently in another room, and she disappeared. 'Come, come, don't be backward, never mind an old sailor,' said Will; 'refresh yourself, and then tell me what I can do to serve you, speak as if I was your father.' 'Oh, sir, don't talk of my father; I have fixed a wound in his heart'—'There, there, don't cry; I can't bear to see a woman's tears—it makes a fool of me; but tell me honestly all about it, for I have got to go to old Admiral M—'s by night,' 'O—— Grove?' inquired Lucy, much agitated. 'Why, aye, do you know him?' 'No, sir; but I have seen—I have been in company with his nephew'; and again she burst into tears as if her heart would break.' 'Why aye, I see how it is; this is some of Master Tommy's doings, eh? Zounds!' clenching his fist—'but no matter. And where are you come from?' 'From my father's, sir.' 'And who is your father?' 'O! do not ask me! my name is Lucy B.' 'What, the daughter of old B. that was in the Venerable as first Lieutenant?' 'Yes, I am indeed his wretched daughter?' 'Zounds, why,' starting up in a passion, 'why, and has Tom dared?—but don't be frightened. And so you have deserted your home and my poor old friend?' 'Spare me, sir, spare me! If my father was indeed your friend, oh succor his erring child.' 'Well, well, well, my upper works get crazy now—hardly able to weather the storm. But the villain that would betray innocence, and then abandon his victim, zounds!—but come, come along.' 'I thought of going to the admiral, sir.' 'To be sure, to be sure! we'll be under way in a minute.' 'Yet, sir, perhaps he will not see me, or it may be injurious to his interests; and oh, I would willingly die to serve him, for he has a feeling heart.' 'A what? a feeling heart! Why are you here then? But come along, sweet heart!' and discharging the reckoning, they set off in company.

Of all the eccentric beings in this eccentric world, old admiral M. was the most eccentric. He had risen solely by merit from the station of cabin boy, and it was ever his boast that he had not skulked in great men's pockets, nor been afraid to dip his hands in a tar bucket. 'I came in at the hawse holes,' he would say, 'and didn't creep in at the cabin windows.' He had been known to absent himself from home for weeks together; and no one could tell where he went, or what had become of him, till his repeated acts of generous bounty discovered the track he had taken. He would frequently return home without previous notice, enter the house unobserved, ring the bell, and order refreshments, as if he had never quitted it. Not an old sailor that had ever sailed with him but was welcome to partake of his cheer, and those who had been his messmates previous to his mounting the uniform (if of good character, but not successful as himself,) always sat at his own table. Possessed of an immense fortune, which he was accustomed to say was drawn from the Spanish stocks—yet without children, for he was a bachelor, he had adopted his nephew, determined to leave him the bulk of his property.

The young man, who really was naturally of an amiable disposition, on this accession to his uncle's favor, associated with some of the dashing characters of the day, and became tinctured with their vices and follies. He had been introduced to the family of Lieutenant B. by a brother officer; and that acquaintance, which terminated so sadly for poor Lucy, was begun. Yet he passionately loved her; but, fearing the condemnation of the admiral, and the loss of his patronage, he had withdrawn himself from Exeter without even bidding her farewell, choosing rather to immure himself from the world than break the oath he had pledged to Lucy, or disoblige his uncle by marrying without his consent, knowing that the old gentleman was ambitious for his nephew to look for a wife agreeably to the high prospects before him. and equally convinced to thwart his inclinations would be to annihilate all his hopes, and cast him adrift upon the world. Such was the state of affairs when Lucy left her home to endeavor to gain an interview with her lover, and fell in with old Will, who in early life, according to his own account, had sailed with the admiral, and was now going to pay him a visit, and see some of his old messmates, of whom the principal part the household was composed. She had been plundered by some villains of all she possessed at daybreak, but still continued her journey, till worn with hunger and faint with fatigue, she entered the inn and implored assistance.

The shades of evening fell on the landscape as they passed under the avenue of trees that led to Grove House. Will, having promised to exert himself in obtaining an interview between Mr. M. and his convoy, left her at a short distance, and proceeded onward. Almost overpowered by her reflections, and every pulse throbbing violently with agitation, she leaned against the trunk of a tree, expecting to see the being whom next to Heaven she loved most tenderly. It was now too dark to distinguish objects, but she could hear footsteps approaching, and she sunk without sense or motion on the ground. On recovery she found herself sitting on a couch in a small room, and the old housekeeper, with other females, sedulously administering to her necessity. Her eye glanced wildly round for another object, while the old lady strove to soothe her mind, informing her that it was herself who had discovered her in the avenue, at the request of old Will. Refreshments were placed, of which Lucy partook sparingly, desirous of knowing, yet trembling to ask, whether Mr. M. was in the house, or had seen the worthy veteran, her conductor.

'Pray, sir,' said the admiral, entering the room abruptly, when his nephew was sitting alone and ruminating upon the object of his sincere attachment, little imagining that she who occupied his thoughts was at that moment under the same roof; 'pray, sir, what does that man deserve who robs a friend of his dearest treasure—who, stealing into the confidence of a young and artless girl, under the flag of affection, turns pirate and slanders his prize with remorseless cruelty?' The young man sat petrified, for these questions were precisely accordant with his own feelings previous to the entrance of his uncle. 'Answer me,' exclaimed the admiral, raising his voice, 'answer me directly!' 'I cannot, sir, I am too deeply sensible of error.' 'Or what does he merit,' continued the admiral, 'who, contrary to the views of a relative that has raised him to opulence, first contracted himself to a young female and then deserted her?' 'Infamy, and disgrace!' exclaimed the agonized M. 'I feel it all—all, and shudder!' 'You have judged right, sir; your acquaintance of the poor distressed child of Lieut. B. I have just received information of, and your own lips have condemned you.' 'Not so much as my heart, sir,' replied M. 'Pass what sentence you please, but oh! suffer me to expiate my faults! Do not drive me to desparation!' 'Tis well, sir, you are convinced of your error,' and ringing the bell violently, a servant appeared. 'Order Mr. M.'s horse to the door;' then turning to the young man, 'This is no longer a home for you; however, you shall first have the satisfaction of facing your accusor;' and again ringing the bell, directed another servant to introduce the stranger.

No culpret ever stood more agitated than M. while these orders were given. He fixed his eyes upon the door in anxious expectation; but what were his feelings—what his agony when Lucy herself appeared! He would have rushed towards her, but his uncle caught his arm, and in a voice that made the poor girl tremble, 'No, sir, would you again coil like a snake about your victim? Would you once more sting a bosom whose only fault was loving a villain? Go, sir, you have forfeited all pretensions to my favor—you have degraded my name—you have disgraced yourself. Go and never let me see your face again!' This was too much for poor Lucy; she had expected a private interview with her lover, and imagined when she quitted the housekeeper's apartment, 'twas for that purpose the folding doors of the drawing room were thrown open. How great, then was her surprise and distress when she found herself in the presence of the admiral! He was habited in an immense cloak, that covered his whole person, and his laced cocked hat upon his head; but the sentence was no sooner pronounced than Lucy knelt before him, imploring mercy. M. at the same moment threw himself by her side, caught her upraised hand, joined it in his own, and offered his petitions with hers. The old admiral dashed the tears from his eyes, and, overcome by the scene, grasped their united hands and blessed them. But who can express the astonishment, the gratitude of Lucy, when, throwing off his cloak and hat, he appeared before her as her generous benefactor, protector and guide—even old Will Block.

YANKEE PEDLARS.

'One day,' said the Bay State pedlar, 'as I was driving along, a fellow with a load of tin came out of a by-road, and following right along in my tracks, 'Mister,' said I, 'which way are you going?'

'Going ahead! don't you see?' said he.

'Yes,' says I; 'I reckon we had better take different roads; else only one of us will not sell any tin. What say you?'

'Yes, we will. You may go ahead and sell all you can, and then I'll sell as much again as you.'

'Why, will you sell much cheaper?'

'No I'll get more for every article.'

'Well, I don't see how you can do it.'

'Try it, and I'll show you, I'll stop here while you drive to the house yonder and sell all you can. Start on your team a little, and then come back for your whip or something you have dropped, and you can see how I sell.'

'Well,' said I; so I drove up to the house and went in, and spoke to the gentleman, who was reading the newspaper.

'How d'ye do?' says I; but he didn't mind anything about me.

'Want to buy any tin pans, pails, or cups, or anything?'

'No.'

'I'll sell cheap, and take almost anything in pay.'

'Don't want none.'

'But just look at my lot, it is the completest you ever saw.'

'Don't want to.'

'Well, I really wish I could sell you something. You really think you can't buy?'

'No, don't want nothing.'

So I went out and started on my horse.

'Whoa!' says I; 'now I'll see what that Connecticut fellow can do.' So I walks back to the house.

'I didn't leave my whip here, did I?'

'Haint seen it,' said the old man, keeping on reading advertisements.

Then the Connecticut fellow came in.

'How far is it to a tavern?'

'Half a mile,' said the old man.

'I'm as dry as a codfish. I'll take some of your water,' walking up to a table, and taking up a pewter mug. 'Oh,' said he, 'it is cider'; making him believe he was going to set it down.

'Drink it,' said the old man; and he did.

'That's royal good cider; you make that for your own use; can't buy such as that; if I had a barrel of that in Boston, I'd get five dollars for it. How did you make it?'

'Made it out of apples.'

'Did you? Well, they must have been extraordinary good ones—every one of them fit to make mince pies of—got a large orchard, haint you, Squire?'

'No.'

'First rate what there is on it, then. Got a snug house here, too; havn't seen many houses I like as well as this; and I've seen a good many in my day. Real snug house,' looking round as if hunting a stray fly, 'how many rooms up stairs?'

'Four, and all finished off,' said the old woman, who was ironing. On that he turned right around and made all his talk to her.

'Four, and all finished off, and furnished: You are thriving like all natur! Got smart girls enough to fill them all up?'

'No, only one.'

'Well, one good one is enough; better than three or four ordinary ones. How old is she?'

'Eighteen.'

'Eighteen; she'll be married before long, I reckon—not many girls like yours live to be old maids.'

'I don't think she'll be an old maid.'

'She looks like you, don't she now? I've heard of her; she's handsome as a picture. What a handsome setting out you'll give her.'

'Yes, I've got five pair of linen sheets and four coverlids that I made for her this summer. I mean, if she ever does get married, that she shall have as good a setting out as any body.'

'So I would, and you are able to do it. Now I think of it, I've got a few first rate things that I mean to carry home to somebody; you can guess who, (winking.) I've been offered more than they are worth, but I would not sell them; but I've a mind to let you have them for that girl of yours. I don't know, though, as I can let them go. Betsey will expect them. But come you may look at them.

So the old woman put on her specs, and went out with him to his wagon. He dug to the bottom and handed out some pans and pails just like those on top.

'Here they are; I keep them stowed away out of sight; the genuine Layfayette tin, come from France. The more you use them the brighter they grow. They never need scouring.'

'What's the price of those common ones?' pointing to some just like those in his hand.

'Five shillings; and these are ten; the Layfayette tin cost nine-and-sixpence; but for that pretty girl's sake—that looks like you they say—I'll let you have a few for seven shillings.'

So he went on talking till he sold her more than five dollars worth of ware not nigh as good as mine, and at a great deal higher price.

When he started on says he 'How much did you sell?'

'None.'

'Ah, you didn't come from Connecticut!'

'No, I didn't,' says I, and then in a low voice, 'and I don't want to, if they all lie as you do.'

CHEMISTRY.

Chalk is easily pulverized. When in powder, it is readily mixed with flour. If sulphuric acid or strong vinegar be poured upon chalk it produces an effervescence as it is termed. By this process the chalk is divided and mixed with another substance. But the first process of dividing and pulverizing is mechanical. The second process, which separates the lime in the chalk from the carbonic acid, and combines it with sulphuric acid, is chemical.

By a file grindstone, copper may be reduced to fine dust, so that it may be diffused through a large quantity of dust of some other kind. If nitric acid (aqua fortis) be poured upon copper, it divides it so minutely, that a piece not larger than a pea can be diffused through a hogshead of water, so as to give it a blue color. The filing or grinding copper is a mechanical process; dissolving it in nitric acid is a chemical process.

When the tanner lays down his hides in bark till the two substances combine so as to form leather, he performs a chemical process. When the saddler or shoemaker unites the leather, cloth, thread, etc, he performs a mechanical process.

When by the aid of potash or soda, the soap-boiler combines oil and water with alkali, he performs a chemical operation. When he cuts his soap into prisms of a convenient size for handling, he performs a mechanical operation.

When the atmosphere strikes the sails of a ship, and moves it across the Atlantic, it performs a mechanical operation; when it combines with the blood, and sustains the whole animal kingdom, it performs a chemical operation.

So we see that there is chemical science and mechanical science, and the one entirely distinct from the other; though artist frequently resort to both for performing their operations. Nearly all the domestic arts combine chemical and mechanical science. Agriculture is a chemical science and a chemical art. In almost every process the farmer performs, he is dependant upon the laws of chemical science for his success. The mechanic who makes his plough and wagon, confines his operations principally to mechanical science.

Cookery is a chemical science and a chemical art. The process of making bread is almost wholly chemical. Roasting the beef or turkey, preparing the tea and coffee, and heating in every form is a chemical process. Every good housekeeper is a good practical chemist, though some may not be free to acknowledge it.

Since all farmers and house keepers, to say nothing of the tanner, the brewer, the tallow-chandler, the dyer, the painter, and a host of other artists, are wholly dependent upon chemical science, for the success of their operations, it is evident that all who live by eating, are also interested in having a knowledge of it generally diffused. Indeed, there is perhaps no science, which it is more important to have familiar to every man, woman and child in the world, than chemistry.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES. The griddle on which cakes are baked should never be touched with grease. Firstly, because it imparts a rancid taste to the cakes. Secondly, if a cooking stove be used, it fills the kitchen if not the whole house with a smell of burnt grease, to say nothing of the parade, and boasting to one's neighbors, by betraying what we are to have for breakfast. Wash the griddle with hot soap suds, scour it with dry sand, and when heated for use rub it with a spoonful of fine salt and a coarse cloth. It will then be ready to receive the cakes. After each cake is removed the salt rubbing must be repeated. If the first does not succeed, try it again, and you will ever after follow this advice of an old housekeeper.

A CASE. The Brussels Herald mentions the death of a rich old maid, in whose repositories were found five hundred pairs of stockings, nearly six hundred chemises, one hundred dozen napkins, twelve dozen sheets, an innumerable quantity of caps, handkerchiefs, etc; and lastly, linen cloth sufficient to provide for the wants of five hundred persons.

TAKING THE PAPERS. Some years ago, a lady, noticing a neighbor of hers was not in her seat at church, one Sabbath, called on her return home, to inquire what should detain so punctual an attendant. On entering the house she found the family busily at work. She was surprised when her friend addressed her—

'Why, la! where have you been to-day, dressed up in your Sabbath clothes?'

'To meeting.'

'Why, what day is it?'

'Sabbath day.'

'Sal, stop washing in a minute! Sabbath day! Well I didn't know; for my husband has got so plaguy stingy, he won't take the papers now, and we know nothing.

Well, who preached?'

'Mr. Hodgkinsnivey.'

'What did he preach about?'

'It was on the destruction of the world and the day of judgment.'

What! is the world destroyed? Well, well, it might be destroyed a dozen times, and we know nothing about it! It won't do, we must have the newspapers again, for every thing goes wrong without the paper. Bill has lost his reading, almost, and Polly has got quite mopish again, because she has got no poetry or stories to read. If I have to take a cart load of potatoes and onions to market, I am resolved to have a newspaper.'

THE CHOLERA—ENGLISH AUTHORITIES. Dr. Rose, a London physician of reputation, infers from a careful examination of the statistics of the Cholera, that opium and calomel have procured the fewest recoveries, and a saline treatment the most. The Medical Times says that a broad flannel roller, worn around the stomach and chest, is the best of all preventatives of the cholera. It also says that good sound food is perfectly safe to be eaten. Persons subject to looseness of the bowels should avoid soups, and adhere to animal food, well roasted, and to bread. Good old Port wine, it affirms, is the best of all drinks; brandy and spirits should be avoided. It says cholera is not contageous, but no family should remain in a house where there has been a case of the disease.

EXTENT OF OREGON. Comparatively few are aware of the vast extent of our possessions west of the Rocky Mountains. To say nothing of the extensive territories of New Mexico, and California, acquired from Mexico, Oregon, on the east, skirts on the Rocky Mountains, eight hundred miles; on the South, three hundred miles along the Snowy mountains; on the west, seven hundred miles along the possessions of Russia and England. This immense valley contains three hundred and fifty thousand square miles—an area nearly equal to that of the original thirteen states, and capable of forming seven states as large as New York or forty as large as Massachusetts.

GOLD SCRAPINGS. A New York paper says every body in that city is gold mad. Nothing is talked of but the cheapest and easiest way of getting to the "places" of the Sacramento, American Forks and Feather rivers. The agents of the steamer Panama, to sail from Panama, Feb 15th, have taken all the passengers she can accommodate, and are now engaging berths on the Oregon, the ship of the 1st of March. Their office is literally blockaded with applicants for passage to El Dorado. A company of jewellers in New York are to be organized in military style, and take the overland route. The California newspaper values the ore already discovered at twenty millions of dollars. So let there be no neck-breaking to get to Sacramento. The dust will last for some time yet. The Sun estimates the number of persons in that city, who mean to emigrate to California between now and next July, at 50,000! Diamonds and platina have been found at Los Angelos, if we may credit one account. It is probable that before the 1st of January a hundred vessels will have left, or be preparing to leave New York for the gold regions. The editor of the Californian announces the stoppage of the Oregon papers; cause, the gold fever. emigration is flowing thence to the Sacramento.

A CASE FOR THE ROD. The most remarkable instance of filial disobedience manifested in extremely tender years, may be found in M. Chateaubriand's Memoirs and he is at once the hero and narrator of it. He says he was the last of ten children, of whom, besides himself, but one brother and four sisters survived. He then adds:—"It is probable that my four sisters owed their existence to a desire on the part of my father to have the perpetuation of his name secured by a second boy. I resisted, I had an aversion to life!"

It was doubtless fortunate for the world and for the son that the father insisted upon having obedience or there is no telling what might not have been anticipated from the maturity of a lad who set up thus early to have his own way.

EMPLOYMENT The man who does not labor somewhere, is worse than useless—he is a dangerous member of society. He becomes a prey to his own passions, and scourges others with his own vices, or panders to those who are able to gratify his irregular desires. Yet so uncertain are human events, so sudden and entire the changes of individual position in the closely contested struggles of life, that mere intellectual cultivation, so far from insuring independence, may not always provide the necessary means of subsistence.

FORCE OF RIDICULE.—The fear of ridicule is one curb upon the follies and eccentricities of human nature, to which it is impossible to make men insensible.

Blessed are they that are lean; for there is a chance to grow fat.

GETTING COMFORTABLE.—One of the wealthiest farmers on the Connecticut, tells the following story. When I come here to settle about forty years ago, I told my wife I meant to be rich—all she wanted was enough to make her 'comfortable.' I went to work and cleared up my land· I've worked hard ever since, and have got rich; as rich as I want to be. Most of my children have settled about me, and they all have good farms. But my wife an't comfortable yet."

A NEVER FAILING REMEDY FOR DYSENTERY. Those afflicted with this disease, by procuring a piece of the root of genuine Turkey Rhubarb, and chewing a piece the size of a cherry stone once or twice through the day, will find certain relief. If the rhubarb be the genuine article, the remedy is almost sure in whatever stage the disease may be.

There is a vast copper mine in Bristol, (Ct.) which is now worked by two hundred operatives. In the month of August eighty two thousand barrels of ore were shipped to the great metropolis.

We should not measure men by Sundays, without looking to what they do all the week after.

At a public dinner at Goldsborough, (N. C.) recently, a pie containing one hundred and twenty chickens and two shoats, was served up among other matters. This throws the "four and twenty black birds" into the shade.

Blessed is she that would get married but can't; for the consolations of the gospel are hers.

He that will not bear the admonition of a friend, deserves to feel the correction of an enemy.

Blessed are the peace-makers; for they shall see God—and get most wofully kicked by their countrymen.

An exchange of good offices is the life of society; a commerce of giving and receiving, fosters all the kind sympathies; the more need we have of one or the other, the more likely mutual regard and attachment.

Blessed is he that is ugly in form and feature, for the girls shan't molest him.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS. The Christmas holidays are again at hand, and the custom of bestowing presents—a custom that calls into activity so much of amiable and generous feeling—is one that should ever be kept up, even among persons of limited means. The value of a gift for Christmas or new year, lies more in the affectionate spirit that prompts it than in the intrinsic value of the article presented. A book or a boquet, when embalmed by love or friendship, will give greater pleasure than more costly remembrancers, and among all the various tokens of affection books are the most appropriate. Flowers fade and wither, but the fragrance of a good book is never lost. It is a companion for lonely and quiet hours, and when associated with the name of a loved one, is prized and preserved as a treasure. A book, by common consent, is a gift that confers no special obligation upon the person who receives it. A young lady may accept a handsome volume from the lover whom she never means to marry, without any compunctions of conscience, when she cannot receive jewels or other valuable tokens.

Those in want of beautiful books, and useful and pretty articles, for presents during the ensuing holiday season, we would recommend to call at the Quincy Bookstore, where they will find a splendid and varied assortment, where the most fastidious cannot fail to be suited. The Messrs. Gill have not only provided for the ladies and gentlemen, but the little ones, who expect a visit from Santa Claus, are also remembered, and an almost innumerable variety of toys and trinkets may be had at their counters. In fact, their store is a complete "curiosity shop," and a visit there is amply worth one's time. Don't forget to take plenty of change with you.

DEATHS. We wish to publish a list of deaths in this town for years 1847 and 1848, and would be very thankful to any person who should furnish us with the particulars of any death that has not been published or inform us of any error that may have occurred in the printed ones. We desire to insert this list the first or second week in January.

ANTI-SLAVERY BAZAAR. The annual National Anti-slavery Bazaar, for the promotion of the anti-slavery cause in the United States, was commenced on Wednesday last, in Faneuil Hall, Boston, and will be continued two weeks. The Hall is beautifully decorated, and a great profusion of useful and fancy articles, of the most tasteful description, are there offered for sale. It is worth the time and expense of a visit to the city to witness the display. Addresses, from distinguished speakers, will be given every evening.

SUBJECTS OF DAILY CONVERSATION. Gold- California—Chagres—tinpans—98 per cent.—$100 to $250 passage - company full—pick-axe—Panama—borrow $700—$40 to $50 a day—going next month—no mica about it—washings—sound the Horn—soon as a freight can be had—fool if you don't go—pay you when I come back—nothing like it—goods 500 per cent—shovel and a bowie knife.

COURT AT DEDHAM. The Court of Common Pleas is now in session at Dedham, Judge Byington presiding. A great number of criminal cases are upon the docket and the Court will probably be in session several weeks. The person who broke into Messrs. Abercrombie & Bent's store, in this town, has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the State Prison There are several indictments against him in Plymouth County.

The case of the Whites and others, for incendiarism in Braintree, will probably come on next week.

FOREIGN. The Royal Mail Steamer Niagara arrived at Boston on Saturday, after a tempestuous passage. There is a gradual and slow improvement in commercial matters.

Lord Melbourne expired on the 24th ult.

In England the cholera had almost entirely ceased its ravages. In Scotland there was a diminution of cases.

The most remarkable news is the successful insurrection at Rome. On the 15th November, the Prime Minister was deliberately assassinated. The insurgents proceeded to the Pope's palace and demanded a new ministry, and other concessions, which were at first refused, but they gave the Pope an hour to consider, announcing their determination to break into the palace and put to death every inmate. Their demands were acceded to. Accounts say the Pope had left Rome in disguise, with the intention of going to France.

The excitement in France increases as the election of President approaches. The elections to the Assembly on the 26th had resulted unfavorably to a Republican government.

FIRE IN DORCHESTER. Last Saturday night at twelve o'clock, fire was discovered breaking out in Engine house No. 3, Dorchester, on the upper road, and before it could be checked the house was destroyed, together with the engine belonging to the company. The fire communicated to Dr. Miller's office, and a building occupied above by Thomas Baldwin, as a dwelling house and below as a West India Goods store. The building was valued at $2500 and insured for $600. The stock in the store was removed but in a damaged state.

GOLD HUNTING. Expeditions are fitting out for the gold region in California, from all parts of the country. A company has been formed in Plymouth. A meeting was held at Neponset Village last Wednesday evening, at which sixty four persons signed as desirous of going. A number have made arrangements to go from this town, as we learn.

CONGRESS. There is nothing particularly interesting in the proceeding of either branch of our National Legislature.

The selectmen of Cohasset have authorised the destruction of all dogs going at large in that town after the 20th of the present month.

The telegraph wires have been suspended over the Kennebec River at Bath, Maine, a distance of 12000 feet, and 180 feet above the water.

It is stated in the Bangor papers, that there will not be half the amount of lumbering done upon the Penobscot waters this winter that there was last year.

A mine of black diamonds, in the shape of a coal bed has been discovered in the town of Weston, Middlesex County, Massachusetts. In digging a trench, pieces of coal were thrown up which, upon examination, proved to be bituminous, burning as freely as Cannel coal.

It is expected that the New York and New Haven Railroad will be so far completed as to make a passage over its whole length on Christmas day.

☞ The most prolific source of disease is undoubtedly impurity of blood. And to it no people are more subject than those of this country, from the plentiful and comparatively luxurious diet in which their prosperity enables them to indulge. To purify the blood, and relieve the bowels from the unhealthy state produced by that impurity, Brown's Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters are extremely well calculated. They will eradicate those impure humors which are the source of so much uneasiness to the system, and occasion such deformity when they make their appearance exteriorly. The demand for the above Bitters is rapidly increasing in all places where they have been sold, and there is scarcely a day passes but we have some ordered by our first physicians, for dyspepsia, indigestion, weakness of the stomach and limbs, costiveness, general debility, rheumatism, etc. In fact there is not the least doubt but they are the best alterative now in use for a disordered system. The vegetables that these Bitters are mainly composed of are too well known to have the least said in their favor. Remember in all cases when you purchase Brown's Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters, to see that the Directions are signed by the proprietor, F. BROWN, in his hand writing, without which none are genuine.

A CERTIFICATE from Mr. Ingerson of Lancaster, New Hampshire, a highly respectable citizen of that place, and Jailer of the County of Coos:

I, George W. Ingerson, of Lancaster, hereby certify, that I have been troubled with the Asthma for about twenty years. Last November, when I began taking Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I had been unable to do any thing for several months, and had not, except a very few nights, been able to rest in my bed. Almost as soon as I began to take it, I felt relieved. I have taken about two bottles. My health is altogether improved. A few returns of the Asthma which I have had in that time, were almost immediately removed by taking the Balsam. I rest well, and my health is and has been for months, better than at any time previous for many years. I recommend this medicine to all who are similarly afflicted.

A sure cure for Dyspepsia and Costiveness.

HARRISON'S PERISTALTICS have had 12 years' trial by the Medical faculty and the public generally. This medicine is in Lozenges, pleasant to the taste, and may be given to children. The Peristaltics are gently laxative, and by their tonic qualities improve the digestive organs and invigorate the whole system. They cure Costiveness, Headache, Dizziness, Sleepiness, Jaundice, Oppression after Eating, Liver Complaint, Diarrhœa, Piles, Dropsy, Debility, Faintness, Weak Stomach, Heartburn, Palpitation, Rheumatism, Pains in the Bones, Scrofula, Tic Douleureux, Worms, etc, etc.

These Lozenges are excellent in all Nervous complaints and Dyspeptic symptoms, Female Suppressions and Irregularities, especially in the young. This medicine contains no preparation of Mercury whatever, and no ingredient which may not safely be given to the most delicate female and under any circumstances.

This preparation is also put up in bottles for seafaring persons, who should always have a supply. An occasional use of the Peristaltics prevents Fevers, Bilious complaints, and chronic or East India Diarrhœa. They are admirably adapted to the complaints incident to the coast of Africa, Sumatra, West Indies and South America.

These Lozenges are recommended by some of the best Physicians in Boston, who use them in their families and general practice All afflicted with oppression after eating, or rising of food will find great relief. They are the best medicine for children known.

DIED.

In South Weymouth, 14th inst., Maj. Jonathan White, aged 48

In Roxbury, 16th inst., of consumption, S. N. Dickinson, Esq., aged 47, well known as the late proprietor of the Dickinson Printing office and Type Foundry, and the compiler of the Boston Almanac.

OBITUARY.

The death of Mrs. Betsey, the wife of Mr. James Green of this town, at the age of sixty five years and six months, which occurred on the fifth inst., was noted in the Patriot a short time since.

The memory of the deceased will long live in the affections of all with whom she was ever associated. Her youthful choice and surviving partner, though somewhat advanced in years, (having enjoyed her society as a wife for more than forty five years,) can testify to her kindness, industry, and ready smile of affection which ever greeted and cheered him at the family circle. But, she has reached the journey of life and gone to that unseen and eternal world, and but a short time will intervene before the perfect in faith will unite with her in a temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

So fade the things of Earth, and, one by one
The brightest, and the best, are called away.
Death loves a shining mark—the deed is done!
The ties of kindried and of friendship, breaking
From earth's dark night, a happy spirit waking,
To sorrow, sin and doubt, no more a prey,
She lives and dwells in realms of endless day.

Christmas and New Year's
AT THE
QUINCY BOOKSTORE.

ON the return of the festive season of CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR, we again ask your attention to the extensive preparations we have made to meet the wants of this community. No pains have been spared in selecting, in order to present to your notice an ELEGANT AND BEAUTIFUL variety of

BOOKS & FANCY GOODS,

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTS.

We have as usual the new volumes of the favorite Annuals,—Friendship's Offering, Rose of Sharon, Christian Keepsake, Amulet, Garland, Keepsake of Friendship, Amaranth, Lady's Annual, and others,—which appear this season with increased beauty; but we have, also, bound in the same beautiful Annual style, exactly suited for GIFTS, the works of Coleridge, Byron, Miss Mitford, Howitt, Moore, Cowper, and other standard works, (which of course cannot be enumerated in this advertisement,) which are not in miniature, but in octavo form, with PLATES, and CLEAR, LARGE TYPE, being ENTIRELY NEW, and

NEVER BEFORE OFFERED IN THIS MARKET.

ALSO, we have (and this will be particularly pleasing to the younger portion of the community) taken especial care to provide ourselves with nearly an entire new collection of

JUVENILE AND TOY BOOKS.

In this department we have always been able to give satisfaction, but we shall present UNUSUAL ATTRACTION this season, having disposed of much of our old stock and replenished with that which is new and beautiful. We trust that all who have young friends whom they are desirous to please will duly notice this.

We are also provided with a large assortment of BIBLES, some in new styles of binding, appropriate to the season,

MINIATURE VOLUMES OF POEMS, &c.,

in almost endless variety, with a general assortment of

BEAUTIFULLY BOUND & ILLUSTRATED BOOKS,

in the various departments of literature.

Our stock of FANCY GOODS, TOYS, &c., has been enlarged by recent purchases, embracing many articles new, beautiful and appropriate.

All we ask of those who are desirous of obtaining something for a memento or love token, on this occasion, is this—that they will favor us with a call, and if they really wish to purchase, the fault will not be ours if they do not, most entirely to their satisfaction.

ARE safely, speedily and most effectually expelled from the system by the use of

WHITWELLS PINK ROOT SYRUP.

Spigilia, or Indian Pink,

has been in use for hundreds of years among the Indian tribes of North America, as a certain remedy for Worms.

Almost every family in N. E. is acquainted with its use. The great and only objection heretofore to its use, has been that it was necessary to pour half a pint down a childs throat in order to destroy and expell the worms; but that objection exists no longer, In the PINK ROOT SYRUP, you have the strongest possible preparation of the Pink root, united with CATHARTICS and TONICS, made into a pleasant and healthful SYRUP, which children will take without any trouble. Indeed, they like it much, and will never refuse to take it. The dose of this agreeable medicine for an infant is only

Half a Teaspoon Full.

Full and ample directions accompany its use. The public are respectfully requested to give it a trial, and they will never use any other remedy.

POETRY.

PADDLE YOUR OWN CANOE.

My father died, God rest his soul,
When years I numbered two,
And left me in this world alone,
To paddle my own canoe.

A step-grandaddy, now no more,
Taught me my P's and Q—
And ever in my ears he dinn'd
To paddle my own canoe.

My home was no Elysian spot
Of bright and sunny hue,
And therefore I the sooner left,
To paddle my own canoe.

And through the world I roamed at large,
O'er land and ocean blue;
And though the struggle oft was hard,
I paddled my own canoe.

For thus I argued, man to man
Is often times untrue,
Then while with life and strength you're blest,
Just paddle your own canoe.

As partners in the strife for gain
Self interest will pursue;
And leave you with their debts, perhaps,
To paddle your own canoe.

And then no sympathy you'll find
From friends that once were true—
They know you lost when first you ceased
To paddle your own canoe.

But I one cherished object sought
And ever kept in view;
A friend of pure, unsullied heart,
To help me paddle my canoe.

A friend she is, in word and deed—
Her interest mine is too;
We twain are one—I still may say,
I paddle my own canoe.

THE WORLD IS SO FAIR!

Why stand'st thou, man, with a heavy heart!
The world is all so fair?
The bird a living song doth rise
With clear, sweet music to the skies,
And blithely warbles to the air—
"The world is so fair! the world is so fair!"

The blossom waits the dawn to see,
Ere she unfolds her sanctuary:
Then breathes from her perfumed chalice there—
"This world is so fair! this world is so fair!"

In the silvery tide of the rivulet bright,
Where wave follows wave in the hurry of flight,
To the banks, where they sparkle, in sweet tones they bear—
"The world is so fair! the world is so fair!"

Why stand'st thou, man! so gloom oppressed,
And gazest alone through thine own dark breast!
O! give but a look to the joyance rare,
The mirth that encircles thee every where!
"The world is so fair! the world is so fair!"

OLD TIMES AND NEW.

Old times! Why should they persuade us
That there's nothing good that's new;
Some day, let what will pervade us,
We shall be old-fashioned too!
Then what folly to be carping
Ever at the modern way,
ONE old tune's not worth the harping—
I'd have new ones every day.

Old times! Let us look around us;
Who has got a friend that's old?
New ones ev'ry day surround us
Not less truthful nor less bold.
"Tell me, old times," says the new times,
"Lied your wisdom in the rack?
Let the new times be the true times,
Who gets wise by looking back?"

Old times! Leave them to the sages
Who have lived on earth too long;
They tell not that FUTURE ages
May proclaim the PRESENT wrong!
Let us live then, hoping, striving,
Or, at least, without alloy;
Till a better time's arriving,
All the present hours employ.

ANECDOTES.

An English Earl at a ball was struck with the appearance of a lady—was introduced and enchanted, in a breath—made love during the country dance, and an offer during supper. 'I should have been happy,' said the lady, 'but I have seven deadly reasons against it.' So saying, she beckoned a gentleman near;—'This is my husband, Captain Coffin, and the father of my six little Coffins.'

A school-master, while correcting an urchin for using bad language, told him to go to the other end of the room and speak to one of the scholars, and that grammatically, or he should be punished. On going, he thus addressed himself to the scholar: 'Thomas, there is a common substantive, of the masculine gender, third person, singular number, angry mood, who sits perched on an eminence at the other end of the room, and wishes to articulate a few sentences with you in the present tense.'

'Pray, of what did your brother die?' said the Marquis Spinola to Sir Horace Vere. 'He died, sir,' replied he, 'of having nothing to do!' 'Alas! sir,' said Spinola, 'that is enough to kill any General of us all.'

A schoolmaster in Connecticut, while examining a boy from Rhode Island, in his catechism, asked the following question: 'How many Gods are there?' The boy, after scratching his head some time, replied, 'I don't know how many you've got in Connecticut but we have none in Rhode Island.'

When Dr. Ehrenberg, the Prussian traveller, was in Egypt, he said to a peasant, 'I suppose you are quite happy now; the country looks like a garden, and every village has its minaret.' 'God is great!' replied the peasant; 'our master gives with one hand and takes with two.'

There's no mistake about it.
What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.
A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.
Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it;
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL'S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.
RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

The Graefenberg Company,
HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No. 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES
Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:
THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc, etc, yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.
The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.
THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.
The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND. This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public. One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.
The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure. Price 25 cents a bottle.
The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.

MISCELLANY.

THE YOUNG REBEL.

In a small farm house, towards the close of the year 1780, sat an old man, his wife, and an only son. The face of the father appeared troubled; at times he looked thoughtful on the floor, and then he would gaze long and wistfully at his son, a fine manly youth of twenty. At length he said,

'David, this is disastrous news from Camden. God knows what will become of the country now! I wish this old wound I got in the French war had not lamed me—but for it I should now be shouldering my musket and marching to defend my country.'

Both the wife and son looked up at these words. The old lady ceased knitting and gazed attentively at her boy. It was evident, from the expression of her face, that patriotism and motherly affection were at variance in her bosom; the son, however, after encountering his father's eyes for a moment, turned confusedly away. The old man's countenance darkened, and he said warmly—

'David, David, why do you linger about the village, when your country needs your services so much? Why, my son, I am ashamed of you! Twice before this I have spoken to you upon this subject, but you appear to have no spirit! What! will you see us trampled upon by the brutal mercenaries of Britain, and still be here supinely? For shame, David—for shame! I will not call you my son. Long since you ought to have been in the army.'

'Joshua, Joshua,' interposed the mother, 'David is but a youth, then do not speak to him so harshly. He cannot feel what you feel, who have fought so often against our country's enemies—Joshua, he is but a boy.'

'A boy indeed, Deborah! Such boys as David have already gained imperishable laurels since the war commenced. I could name a host of them! Why, were it not for the boys of the land, where would be our army, which I dare say is one-quarter composed of boys of David's age.' The old man was excited, and it was the first unkind word he had ever used to his son.

David arose and left the house. He walked some distance apparently in deep thought.

'What will not woman do,' he at last muttered; 'here I have been lingering about the village, when I should have been off long ago. And for what? why to meet a pretty girl, and listen to her musical voice—but now I will be myself again! What did he call me?—was it not a coward? Now by heavens I will learn him that he has a son who possesses the spirit of his father. Away then with love, for I feel that I am called upon to act, and no longer to dream! Ere a fortnight my father shall hear from me, or I will lose my life in striving for it.' And with this resolution he turned and retraced his steps.

When he reached home he sought the stable, and saddling his horse and mounting him, struck him into a gallop, which continued for several miles,—at length he stopped and looked at the windows of a farm-house half hid between the clustering trees. This was the residence of Mary Bunker, the mistress of his heart; the lights showed that the family had not retired, and he resolved to pay her a visit before his departure.

She was alone when he entered, and a few words acquainted her with his determination. She burst into tears.

'Nay! Mary,' he said, 'you must not unman me. At first I resolved to leave you without a farewell, for I knew you dreaded my taking an active part in this struggle. But I could not be so cruel as to desert you without a word.'

'I will compose myself,' said the fair girl with an effort to smile. 'I know I have done wrong to persuade you to stay; but you can-

'I will compose myself,' said the fair girl with an effort to smile. 'I know I have done wrong to persuade you to stay; but you cannot imagine the anxieties I suffer on account of my brothers, and I could not bear to have you encounter their danger. But since the defeat at Camden, I feel that every man is wanted by our country. Go then, dearest, and may God be with you. My prayers shall be with you night and day.'

David pressed the now weeping girl to his bosom, snatched a hasty kiss at the sound of approaching footsteps, wrung her hand and was gone.

The next day he left the neighborhood of his father's house, armed with a musket and mounted on a sturdy horse. His destination was the American camp, then far to the northward; but as the intervening country was filled with the enemy, he knew there would be considerable address required in order to effect his purpose. Before his departure, he saw a few of his old playmates, who promised to follow him as soon as possible.

Night found him near a lonely farm house, to which he proceeded boldly in pursuit of a lodging. At first the occupant received him coldly, but a chance expression convincing David that his host was a tory, he affected the same political creed, and was immediately welcomed.

The royalist produced his cider after supper, and insisted that David should join him at his potations; this the young man did, taking care however not to indulge too freely, while the farmer, overjoyed to find what he supposed to be a new recruit for his party, drank without stint, and became more and more communicative. To his horror, David soon learned that a party of royalists, led by a Major Wilson, celebrated for his toryism and ruthlessness, were to start early on the ensuing day on an expedition to seize and hang the two Bunkers, who had made themselves particularly obnoxious to the royalist leaders. David knew enough of this partizan warfare to be assured that no mercy would be shown to his friends. He also knew enough of the character of the Major to suspect that strong personal motives had led to the planning of so distant an expedition when there were others as inviting nearer home. He accordingly set himself to discover from his half inebriated companion the truth. Nor was it long before success crowned his adroit cross-examination.

'Why, you see,' said the host, 'I believe there is a little revenge for a slight received from the fellows' sister, mixed up with the Major's desire to catch the Bunkers. The girl is very pretty they say, and the Major, when he was down there on a visit last year, before the war, wanted to marry her, but she would have nothing to say to him. Ever since he has vowed he would make her rue the day. You may depend upon it, he will have her upon his own terms now. Thank Heaven, there is no law any longer to prevent an honest loyalist from doing as he pleases to these rascally rebels. But yonder is the Major now,' suddenly said his host, starting up, 'I will introduce him to you at once—a merry fellow you'll find him. Lord love you, he's as brave as a lion.'

David, though horrified at the diabolical plot he had heard, saw the necessity of dissembling in order to learn further of the tory's plans, and find means, if possible, to circumvent them. He arose therefore and shook the Major's hand warmly; he pledged him immediately in a brimmer, and soon contrived to make the royalist believe that he was anxious to join a troop and take part against the rebels. This induced the Major to be unusually civil, for he wished to secure so athletic a recruit himself. It was not long before a bargain had been concluded between the two. David refused however to sign the agreement that night; he pretended that several others of his friends were dissatisfied and desirous of joining the royalists; and his object, he said, was to secure a commission for himself by inducing them to join. This tempting bait took; the Major promised him a commission in his troops in case of success, and David signified his intention of setting forth, after he had taken a few hours rest, in order to lose no time in gathering his recruits.

The dread of discovery had been constantly before our hero during the management of his negotiations, for the reason that he was well known to many of the Major's troops, and if any of them had come, his feigned name would not have protected him from detection. He wished to get off that night, as he had proposed; but to this neither his host nor the Major would hear, and he was forced to remain till morning. What was his anguish on rising, to hear that the Major had been gone some hours, and was already on his way to Bunkers with his troops. Dissembling his anxiety, David partook of a hasty breakfast, and mounting his horse rode slowly away. But when out of sight of the house, he struck into a fierce gallop, which he continued till he came in sight of a cross-road, where was a tavern. Here he stopped, and learned that the royalists had taken the high road, he turned aside into a narrow and more circuitous one.

'It is my only chance to avoid them,' he said, again dashing into a gallop. 'Pray God, I may reach the settlement in time to collect a few of our lads and march to the Bunkers. There is no other hope now left.'

Night had fallen as they expected before the tories were able to reach the vicinity of the house they were in search of. At length however, after a silent march through the woods it broke upon their view. A light was burning in one of the windows, and when they arrived close to the premises, the lively notes of a violin reached their ears, proving that the brothers were not aware of their presence, but enjoying themselves in imagined security.

'Now, men,' whispered the leader of the tories, 'when I give the word, fire a volley at the house by way of introducing ourselves; we will then surround the house and enter it.'

At that instant the deep bay of a dog rang in their ears, and a large mastiff sprang from under the house and rushed at the Major.

'Fire!' he cried.

Twenty guns broke upon the stillness of the night—the dog fell dead—every pane of glass in front of the house was shivered and the tories yelled like savages.

In an instant the lights in the house were extinguished, the violin as quickly ceased, and a noise was heard at the door. The tories immediately made a rush at it. But it was already barred, and being made of stout oak plank, resisted all their efforts. A rifle cracked from one of the upper windows, and one of the tories fell desperately wounded. Another report succeeded, and another tory fell, and Major Wilson was fully aware that both Bunkers were at home and wide awake.

A shed turned the rain from the front of the house, and underneath this the tories shielded themselves from the fire of the Bunkers, and went to work at the door. Suspecting such resistance—perhaps from his knowledge of their character—one of the men had brought an axe with which he commenced hewing at the door, and soon cut it to pieces. Here a desperate battle ensued. The two brothers were powerful men, and as courageous as they were strong;—and now with clutched rifles they disputed the entrance of the whole tory force. The door being small they stood their ground for half an hour, felling during that time some of those who had the temerity to enter first, but finally numbers overcame them and they were flung upon the floor and bound. The tories, inflamed to madness at the great resistance which had been made, and their own losses, now seized the mother and sister, and made preparations to hang the brothers before their eyes;—the ropes were already around the necks of the victims, when the Major addressed his men:

'Now, friends, as soon as these villains are dead, we will set fire to this house—the old woman there,' he said with a brutal laugh, 'may be left inside, but the young one I reserve for myself.'

'Hist!' cried one of the men in a loud voice. The Major ceased, and they heard a voice outside the house. Although the words were spoken low, the listeners distinctly heard, 'when I say fire, give it them!'

A man with blanched cheeks now rushed among them exclaiming—

'The yard is full of men!'

'Fire!' cried a deep voice from the yard—a general volley succeeded, and so well had the aim been directed in the door, that several tories fell, either dead or desperately wounded. In turn the tories retreated up stairs, when David, our hero, rushed into the room which they had just left, and cut the ropes which bound the two Bunkers and their mother and sister.

'May God Almighty bless you for this,' cried one of the Bunkers.

The two men sprang up, seized their rifles which had been left in the room, and prepared to retaliate the treatment which they had just received.

Long and desperate was the battle; the tories fought for life; the whigs for revenge. At length the latter triumphed, though not until their enemies had been almost exterminated. The Major fell by the arm of our hero, who sought him out in the hottest of the fight, and engaged him singlehanded.

No language of ours can express the emotions of David, as he pressed his betrothed bride to his bosom; and his heart went up in thankfulness to Heaven for his timely arrival, when he thought that a delay of half an hour longer would have consigned her to a fate worse than death. The gratitude of her brothers was expressed in many words, but hers was silent and tearful, yet oh! how much more gratifying.

'I almost called you a coward, son David,' said his father to him, when they met, 'but you are a chip of the old block, and I did you wrong. Deborah, he is a boy to be proud of—is he not? You may founder one of my horses every day that you do such a deed—it beats any I ever saw in the old French war.'

David's gallantry in this act drew around him in a few week more than a score of hardy young fellowers, who fought with him to the close of the war, when he returned and was happily married to the heroine of our story.

KEEPING APPLES. An old farmer says he has long been in the habit of preserving his choice apples for late use, in plaster. He takes common flour barrels—covers the bottom to the depth of six inches with finely pulverized plaster, thoroughly dried, and then places a stratum of apples, not so close as to touch each other, and cover them with another layer of plaster, carefully filling all the interstices and making the whole close and compact by the pressure of the hand. In this way he fills his barrels; and the apples will keep perfectly sound for a twelve-month, or longer if desired. A crisp, juicy apple in the warm sultry days of June or July, is a luxury not often obtained; hence any method for the preservation of its many and distinguished excellences, is a desideratum devoutly to be wished.

A MORNING FOR RABIT HUNTING

One cold morning in last February, the snow lying some ten inches deep on the ground, a circle of half a dozen town's people had girdled the fire in Mr. M.'s bar-room, and as the number was considerable, and each was anxious to get as near as possible to the source of comfort, the close wedged circle of chair backs formed a sort of cordon sanitaire, since without some one should move, all ingress to the fire was cut off as though it was under quarantine. And the semi-circular row of legs and feet turned in toward the hearth, looked like the spokes of an enormous wagon wheel. Even the landlord was excluded, and with his hands in his pockets, Mr. M. was industriously promenading his bar room endeavoring to look as good natured and as comfortable as circumstances would permit.

In this state of things Dr. Z. entered rubbing his hands and pronouncing energetically several monosyllabic words in connection with some quite original observations on the state of the weather. But in vain did he, with blue nose, beseeching look, walk round the semi-circle of of kind-hearted neighbors to get access to the fire—not a soul moved.

'By the laws, it is cold!' exclaimed the doctor by way of drawing attention to his forlorn condition.

'Hey? cold did you say?' answered one carelessly; 'yes, I should think likely it is, out in the street;' and he coolly gave his chair a hitch, in the unsuccessful effort to get it an inch nearer the fire.

Now Dr. Z., though one of the best hearted men in the world, is exceedingly irritable; and, while as fond of a joke as Curran was, is known as a perfect dare-devil, capable of anything; and after a moment's waiting, he left the room, muttering somewhat expressive of his private opinion as to the state of civilization in that town. Crossing the street to a store, he put neatly up a bundle some four inches by two in size, in one corner of which he put about a spoonful of powder.

Re-entering the bar-room he tipped the landlord a sly wink, and then, by personal appeal, prevailed upon the most good-natured man of the group to move his chair momentarily so as to admit Z. within the circle, a movement which the rest reproved instantly, by looking daggers and icicles at the good natured man.

Dr. Z. quietly turned his back to the fire, pulling his coat tails aside, and very composedly whistled Yankee Doodle.

At length some one chanced to remark—'Must be a good morning for rabbit hunting.'

'Yes,' said the doctor, catching eagerly at the very hint he had been waiting for, 'yes, I should says so. I'm going myself directly. Just bought a pound or two of first rate powder over the way here. Finest article in the town.'

And coolly taking out the package, he tore off a corner, as if at random, and pouring upon his hand a spoonful of the apparent contents, threw it upon the fire.

The explosion elevated some half dozen of the circle (who had not noticed what he was doing) two or three inches from their chairs, and loud remonstrances followed against any more chemical experiments of that sort; while the landlord, who had got his cue, remarked,

'By George! you'd better blow a man's house up had'nt you?'

'If you say much I will,' rejoined Z., in great apparent heat. 'I'd just as soon pitch the whole two pounds in the fire as not.'

'I'd like to see you,' replied M., confidently.

'Do you dare me to do it?' shouted Z.

'Yes I do,' doggedly answered the landlord.

No sooner said then done. With a muttering remark about 'taking dare from any man,' Z. dashed the bundle among the blazing brands and sprang toward the door, followed by the landlord.

Heavens and earth, what a scattering! No one stopped to shove back his chair—everything turned a complete somerset; and, gathering themselves up as quickly as they could disentangle arms and legs from the confused mass, everybody shot for the doors and windows without stopping to look behind him.

One man, whose pluck has been tried on ordinary occasions, vanished through the back door, jumped a five feet fence without breaking his trot, and was last seen streaking it down a back street, yelling murder at the top of his voice, once in a while looking backwards to dodge the falling timber.

Another long-legged individual, who is built like a pair of tongs, made but three strides across a fifty feet street, and headed up a lane leaning forward at an angle of forty-five degrees putting down his long spars like the bucket of a steamboat wheel, with his coat tail streaming behind him like the tail of a comet.

It is needless to say the Doctor was entirely satisfied with the result of the punishment for their selfishness, which he administered.

BLESSINGS OF POVERTY.

One of the most ridiculous things we know of, in this oftimes funny world, is to hear a rich man lecturing upon the blessings of poverty. There are some men found arguing in this way—who contented very gravely that it is an advantage to be poor—that want is the mother of the virtues—that all the spiritual graces are best developed under its influence, and that it is only in the school of adversity that the lessons of a manly education are taught. Such a doctrine we continually hear preached—laid down in fact as nothing less than an axiom, and by whom? Nine times out of ten by the pets of wealth and easy fortune, men who in their babyhood were fed with silver spoons on beds of down, and who from their youth up have luxuriated in the finest clothes, the daintiest fare, the most splendidly furnished rooms—and who, at any time, have hardly to breathe a wish touching their personal comforts, ere it is gratified. It is, in fact, any where but in the rugged school of experience, that they have learned the "truths" they are so fond of inculcating.

It is very easy to descant upon the blessings of poverty, while sitting of an evening before a ruddy fire, in an elegant, luxurious room, fine Brussels to tread upon, long flowing curtains to exclude the air, rich sofas to lounge upon, and the recollection of $50,000 in good stocks. We think we could write a most convincing essay on the blessings of poverty, under such circumstances; but then we should n't like to be called on to taste any of the blessings, or demonstrate practically the truth of the doctrines in our own experience.

But seriously—as a contemporary aptly says, "When we see our popular teachers, who now spend so much breath on the importance of poverty and destitution as an effectual means of grace, clothed in 'hodden gray,' and partaking of the course fare of paupers, instead of rejoicing in the finest of broadcloth and the snowiest of linen, uttering their admonitions from libraries adorned with the costliest treasures of art, and basking in the wreathed smiles of beauty in fashionable drawing rooms, we shall begin to to believe that elegance and refinement are incompatible with moral elevation, and that when men become virtuous, ginger will no longer be hot in the mouth, and 'cakes an ale' will disappear."—Yankee Blade.

STORY OF A SAILOR.

Four years ago I left the port of Boston, the master of a fine ship bound for China. I was worth ten thousand dollars, and was the husband of a young and handsome wife I had married 6 months before. When I left her, I promised to return to her in less than a twelvemonth. I took all my money along with me, save enough to support my wife in my absence, fore the purpose of trading when in China on my own account. For a long time we were favored with prosperous wind; but when in the Chinese sea a terrible storm came upon us, so that in a short time I saw the vessel must be lost, for we were drifting on the rocks of an unknown shore. I ordered the men to provide each for himself, in the best possible manner, and forget the ship, as it was impossible to save her. We struck—a sea threw me upon the rock senseless, and the next would have carried me back into a watery grave, had not one of the sailors dragged me farther up the rocks.

There were only four of us alive, and when morning came, we found we were on a small uninhabited island, with nothing to eat but the wild fruit common to that portion of the earth. I will not distress you by an account of our sufferings there; suffice is to say we remained sixty days before we could make ourselves known to any ship. We were taken to Canton, and there I had to beg; for my money was at the bottom of the sea, and I had not taken the precaution to have it insured.

It was nearly a year before I found a chance to come home, and then I, a captain, was obliged to ship as a common sailor! It was two years from the time that I left America that I landed in Boston. I was walking in a hurried manner up one of its streets, when I met my brother-in-law. He could not speak, nor move, but he grasped my hand and the tears gushed from his eyes.

'Is my wife alive?' I asked.

He said nothing.

Then I wished I had perished with my ship, for I thought my wife was dead: but he very soon said:

'She is alive.'

Then it was my turn to cry for joy,—he clung to me, and said:

'Your funeral sermon has been preached, for we have thought you were dead for a long time.'

He said my wife was living in our cottage, in the interior of the State. It was then three o'clock in the afternoon, and I took a train of cars that would carry me within twenty five miles of my wife. Leaving the cars, I hired a boy, though it was night to drive me home. It was about two o'clock in the morning when that sweet little cottage of mine appeared in sight. It was a warm moonlight night, and I remember how like a Heaven it looked to me. I got out of the carriage and went to the window of the room where the servant girl slept and gently knocked. She opened the window and asked, "Who was there?"

"Sarah, do you know me?" said I.

She screamed with fright, for she tho't me a ghost, but I told her to unfasten the door and let me in for I wished to see my wife. She let me in and gave a light, and I went up stairs to my wife's room. She lay sleeping quietly. Upon her bosom lay our child whom I had never seen. She was as beautiful as when I left her, but I could see a mournful expression upon her face. Perhaps she was dreaming of me. I gazed for a long time—I did not make any noise for I dared not wake her. At length I imprinted a soft kiss upon the cheek of my child. While doing it, a tear dropping from my eye, fell upon her cheek. Her eyes opened as clearly as though she had not long been sleeping. I saw that she began to be frightened, and I said:

"Mary it is your husband!"

And she clasped me about my neck and fainted.

But I cannot describe to you that scene. She is now the happy wife of a poor man. I am endeavoring to accumulate a little property, and then I will leave the sea forever.

ECLIPSES IN 1849. In the year 1849 there will be four eclipses—two of the sun and two of the moon. One of the lunar eclipses will be visible in the United States. The first eclipse will be of the sun, on the 22d of February, and will be visible in the western portion of Asia and the northwestern portion of North America. The second of the moon, on the 5th of March, and will be visible throughout the United States. The third will be a total eclipse of the sun on the 17th of August ; and the fourth an eclipse of the moon on the 2d of September, both invisible in the United States.

GOLD. Absolutely pure gold is 24 carats. The gold coin of England is an alloy of eleven parts gold and one copper. One pound Troy is now coined into 46 29-40 sovereigns. Our gold coins contain eleven parts pure gold and one of alloy composed of silver and copper. Our eagle contains 270 grains of standard gold, of which 247 1-2 grains are pure gold and 22 1-2 alloy.

ACID SPRINGS. A number of acid springs have been discovered in Byron, Genesee County, (N. Y.) They are strongly impregnated with pure sulphur, which increases in strength during a drought. The vegetable matter is killed around them. The water is colorless, and from one spring flows in sufficient quantity to turn a grist mill. A similar spring is known to exist in Persia, Asia, where it is used to make sherbet, as a substitute for lemons.

THE SHORTEST DAY. Thursday forenoon, 21st December, about eleven o'clock, the Sun attained its greatest south declination, and consequently the interval between sunrise and sunset, was, in northern latitudes, the shortest in 1848. This interval was in Boston nine hours, four minutes ; in New York, nine hours, sixteen minutes ; in Washington, nine hours, twenty seven minutes ; in Charleston, ten hours, one minute ; and in New Orleans, ten hours, eleven minutes.

ADVICE. Be content as long as your mouth is full and your body warm, remember the poor, kiss the pretty girls, don't rob your neighbor's hen roosts, never pick an editor's pocket nor entertain the idea that he is going to treat, kick dull care to the duce, black your own boots, shave with ice water, and sew on your buttons when you burst 'em off your pantaloons !

ANGELS ON EARTH. In sickness there is no hand like a woman's hand—no heart like a woman's heart—no eye so untiring—no hope so fervent. Woman by a sick man's couch is divinity impersonated.

CARROTS. William A. Wheeler of Worcester, raised on one acre of laud this year, 1011 bushels of carrots, which he sold for $252,25. His clear profit from the acre, deducting expenses for cultivation, manure, etc, was $132,50.

INJURIOUS TO THE BRAIN. 'Tell your father,' said John Randolph to a young friend, 'that I recommend abstinence from novel reading and whiskey punch. Depend upon it, sir, they are both injurious to the brain.'

HORACE MANN. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Board of Education, at their last meeting :—

Resolved, That in reviewing the official course of the late Secretary of the Board, we are led to contemplate extraordinary proofs of the devotion of the talents of the highest order, under the influence of the purest motives, to a work of usefulness, which, in respect alike to the magnitude and permanence of its results, and the nature and extent of the labor involved in it, may be deemed as unsurpassed in the annals of the Commonwealth.

Resolved, That, in yielding to the necessity of dissolving the connection, which has so long subsisted between the Board and its late Secretary, we desire to place on record, and to tender to Mr. Mann the most unqualified assurance of our official approbation of his services, and of our warmest personal regard, and best wishes for his future usefulness, honor, and happiness.

Resolved, That His Excellency the Governor, as Chairman of the Board, be requested to communicate to the Hon. HORACE MANN, an attested copy of the foregoing Resolutions, and that the Secretary be instructed to annex a copy to the annual Report of the Board which is to be submitted to the Legislature.

CHANGEABLE TEMPERATURE AND HEALTH. A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, says :—' At Franconia, N. H., the coldest place with which I am in regular correspondence, and where the weather changes more suddenly and more extensively than any other place with which I am acquainted, the people are healthy and are long livers. I wrote to my correspondent, P. Putnam, Esq., in the early part of this month, inquiring as to the age of some of inhabitants there. The following is in reply :

"We have in this place and vicinity a good number of aged people : you are doubtless aware that the population is sparse in this section of the country but within a circuit of four or five miles I have in my recollection persons of the following ages, viz : 96. 94. 87. 85 87. 80. 80, 77, 82. 83. 80, 75, 90. 85. 80, 84. 80. 79, and there are probably others whom I do not now recollect, besides many others of 70 years of age and upwards. My impression is that the cholera has never visited this state, certainly not this vicinity."

COST OF MAIL SERVICE. The average cost of transporting the United States mail, taking all the modes together, is not quite six cents per mile. The average cost of transportation in all modes, exclusive of steamboats and rail-roads, is thirteen and a half cents per mile. The average cost of transportation in steam-boats is six cents per mile. The average cost of transportation by railroad is thirteen and a half cents per mile. The entire length of post routes in operation during the year ending 30th, June 1848, was 163,208 miles. The aggregate transportation of the mails over these routes during the year was 41 012 579 miles—and the cost for the year was $2,394,703.

A CHILD WITH TWENTY NAMES.—The Madrid Gazette officially announces the birth of the Duchess de Montpensier's child, and that she has been baptised Maria Isabel Francisca de Asis Antonia Luiza Fernanda Cristina Amelia Felipa Adelaida, Jesefa Elena Enriquita Carolina Justa Rufina Gaspara Melchora Baltasara Matea.

NEW HAMPSHIRL BANKS—There are 21, and on the first December had $2 098 000 capital stock actually paid in : debts due the banks $33 951 73 ; due from directors $73 593 41 ; all debts due the banks $3. 622, 499 64 : specie in vaults $160 983 ; bills in circulation $5 519,587 ; real estate belonging the banks $497,764 62.

When we have often baulked our appetites by denying them what they crave, they will ere long grow so gentle that they will crave no more. Neither riches nor poverty bless or curse any man but according to his spirit and understanding.

The publication of illustrated annuals and gift books, which, both in England and in this country, occasions a larger expenditure in favor of literature and engraving than any other department of business, was originally suggested by the German illustrated almanacs. The first English illustrated annual was the 'Forget Me Not,' published in 1823.

President Everett has governed Harvard College upon temperance principles. No intoxicating liquor was allowed at his inauguration, none at his levee, none at dinner at the Phi Beta Kappa Society, none at commencement dinner, and none allowed among the students.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, DEC. 30, 1848.

John A. Green, Editor.

NEW YEAR. With the present number, twelve years will have "passed away" since the Quincy Patriot was established. Under all circumstances, the encouragement extended has been flattering to our expectations, and we hope and have faith that our efforts and habits for the future will be still more deserving of patronage. We expect in some manner to settle with all indebted to us, and desire also to adjust all claims of our creditors, during the month of January. All interested must be "on hand" and not neglect to do the "handsome thing." Now is the time to settle, and especially the printer's bill.

We wish everybody a "Happy New Year," and hope all will enter upon its duties with new hopes, new efforts, and new associations of social, intellectual, and moral happiness. Now is a goodly time to make resolutions for our conduct the coming year. Let all worshippers at the shrine of Bacchus adopt as his motto—"Taste not, touch not," any liquid that has a tendency to steal his senses, destroy his health and reputation, and make him a fool.

Young men and maidens—set down some good resolutions for the forth coming year—so that you will be wiser and better, when it shall draw to a close.

Ye middle aged—your sands have half run out ! if you have not lived as you ought, ask pardon for the past, and live purer and holier for the remainder of your lives.

You, whose heads are silvered o'er with age—whose faces are—

"Ploughed by the share of years ;"

remember you stand upon the very brink of the grave—and after a few more rising and setting suns, you will,

"Upon this bank and shoal of time,
Soon jump the life to come !"

Then if you have lived an honest, virtuous and righteous life, you will, when the hour of dissolution draws nigh, exclaim—

"Oh Grave, where is thy victory ! Oh Death, where is thy sting !"

THE PEOPLE'S OWN. This is a large weekly publication, devoted to romances, tales, novelty, biography, travels, wit, poesy, news, etc. Theodore Foster is the agent in New York City, where the paper is published. It is an interesting hebdomadel, and richly worth the subscription price of two dollars per year.

COURT AT DEDHAM. Guilford White of Braintree, has been convicted of setting fire to a barn in Randolph, a few months since. Sentence has not yet been passed. His brother is now on trial for a similar offence.

The court will probably continue in session the ensuing week.

MAMMOTH PETITION AGAINST SLAVERY. The New York Independent says that a zealous committee of ladies in New York, have conceived the idea of obtaining the names of an immense number of women, all over the country, as signers to a single petition to Congress, against the extension of slavery, and for its extinction, wherever the power of Congress can reach it. They hope every woman who may receive a copy will get as many signers as she can by the 18th of January, and send the petition, with the names, to either of the following gentlemen, who have agreed to take charge of such petitions, viz :—Hon. John P. Hale, Hon. J. R. Giddings, Hon. J. G. Palfrey, Hon. Amos Tuck.

SENATORS. By the official returns of the votes for Senators in the District of Norfolk, it appears that the whole number of votes is 9463 ; necessary for a choice 4732. No one having that number there is no choice. The constitutional candidates are :

David A. Simmons, who has	4398
James C. Doane,	4621
Lewis Harding,	4462
Jesse Pierce,	3275
Milton M. Fisher,	3429
Edward L. Keyes,	3252

CLEAR THE TRACK. As a train was coming out of Boston, a few evenings since, over the Old Colony Road, it met a man driving a horse and wagon along the track as independently as if he had paid toll, and had a right to be there. The horse, more sensible, turned out as the locomotive approached, but did not get the wagon out of the way, so it was smashed up. The man we understand was not much hurt.

COURT MARTIAL. This military tribunal, in Boston, has closed its labors. It was convened by Maj. Gen. Howe of Weymouth, who preferred charges against Brig. Gen. Dunham of Abington, After a deliberation of an hour or hour and a half the Court came to a decision, which was sealed up and sent to head-quarters. The decision, of course, is not known.

SUDDEN DEATHS. William J. Snelling, Esq., editor of the Boston Herald, died on Sunday morning at his residence in Chelsea, from apoplexy, aged forty four. He had been unwell four days. A few hours after his death, Mr. Simon Jordan, father-in-law to the deceased, while endeavoring to comfort his bereaved daughter, suddenly fell back and expired. His age was sixty five.

A young woman in Newton Lower Falls, died very suddenly, on the 22d inst., from a disease of the heart. She visited Boston during the day previous and returned in apparent good health and spirits.

HOLDEN'S MAGAZINE. The January number of this richly illustrated periodical has come to hand. The reading matter will compare favorably with the contents of any magazine in the country, and the illustrations are of a much higher order than those generally found in publications of this kind. They are all wood, in the greatest perfection of that popular style of art. The present number contains a full length portrait of Hon. Horace Greeley ; portraits of Dr. William Turner, Rev. Mr. Dewey and Louis Blanc ; a picture of the falls of Genesee, and several fancy portraits.

WATER CURE JOURNAL. The January number of this work, which is now before us, is the first of a new volume. The object of the Journal is to explain the new system called Hydropathy, and as it is only one dollar a year, readers can get an idea of its merits for a small sum. The water cure has, as yet, received but little attention in the community, but if its claims are half so well founded as its advocates contend, it is destined to become a blessing to the race. Fowlers & Wells, New York, are the publishers.

SOUTH SHORE RAILROAD. At a meeting of the stockholders, held at Wales's Hotel, in Weymouth, on the 13th inst., the following gentlemen were chosen Directors for the year ensuing :—

Alfred C. Hersey, George T. Bigelow, William Humphrey, of Boston ; John W. Loud, Joseph Loud, Jr., of Weymouth ; Elliot White, of Braintree ; James C. Doane, of Cshasset.

Alfred C. Hersey, Esq. was chosen President.

The road is nearly completed, and is expected to be opened for travel on Tuesday next. The rails are laid the whole length, so that a passenger car passed over the road last week.

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. At the annual meeting of this company, held in Boston on Wednesday last, the following gentlemen were chosen directors : E. H. Derby, John Seaver, Urial Crocker, H. H. Hunnewell, I. L. Hedge, Jacob H. Loud, Pelham W. Hayward.

AN INVENTION. Mr. J. Robinson of Lawrence, (Mass.) has procured a patent for a machine for pegging boots and shoes, by which one man can drive one hundred pegs a minute. At every revolution it cuts pegs from the sheet, makes the holes, and leaves them neatly and firmly set in the leather. A truly wonderful invention!

SENTENCED. The Supreme Court, at East Cambridge, sentenced Barney Golden, for manslaughter in killing his wife by kicking her down stairs last summer while intoxicated, to two years in the House of Correction.

PRIZE TRAGEDY. The prize of one thousand dollars offered by Edwin Forrest, the tragedian, for an original five-act tragedy, has been awarded to George H. Miles, Esq., a member of the Baltimore bar. There were nearly sixty competitors for the prize.

A MONSTER. A gentleman of Nahant, while fishing about ten miles to the eastward of that place, captured a Nurse Fish, or Sleeper, which measured over ten feet in length, and weighed about one thousand pounds. This fish is very rarely taken in our waters. It is of the shark family, but much less active,

A NIGHT OF IT. On Friday night of last week the engine of the afternoon train from Lawrence to Salem, got frozen up in the woods, and the passengers were obliged to occupy the cars all night.

FIRE IN CHASSET. A large building recently erected by Mr. Henry Doane, for a boarding house, and nearly completed, was burnt last week. Loss five thousand dollars, insurance three thousand five hundred dollars.

FIRE IN SACO. The town of Saco, (Me.) was visited with a destructive fire on Thursday evening of last week, the flames reducing eight houses and stores to ashes. The loss is estimated at twenty five thousand dollars. The editor of "The Union" was obliged to move his stock and materials in something of a hurry, and with some loss.

COMPLETED. The Worcester and Nashua Railroad is now open through the whole route, and the cars have commenced their regular trips thereon.

LECTURE IN WEYMOUTH. Miss Lucy Stone, an agent of the Massachusetts Anti Slavery Society, will lecture in Weymouth next Tuesday evening, January 2d.

QUINCY SAVINGS BANK. This institution, we learn, is in a flourishing state. Pesons wishing to make deposits should do so previous to Tuesday next, to draw interest for the ensuing quarter. Mr. Israel W. Munroe is the Treasurer ; office at the store of Messrs. Josiah Brigham & Co.

AMERICAN ART UNION. The annual distribution of Paintings and other works of art came off last week, in New York city. The whole number of tickets for drawing was 16,745, and the number of pictures distributed, four hundred and fifty four. The "Voyage of Life," by Cole, valued at six thousand dollars, was drawn by Mr. J. T. Broadt of Binghampton, (N. Y.) a journeyman printer. A Boston man who had thirty chances did not draw anything.

ANNIVERSARY JUBILEE. The Rough and Ready Club of Boston are to have a grand dinner in Faneuil Hall on the 22d of February, the anniversary of the birth of Washington, and of the battle of Buena Vista. Several eminent individuals have already signified their intention of being present.

A PHILANTHROPIST. John Augustus, the well known working philanthropist of Boston, during seven years labor in the Police Court, ending in October last, has bailed 353 males and 149 females, most of them convicted of drunkenness. The amount of costs, etc, paid by him for persons discharged on his recommendation is $1548. Not one of the persons bailed by Mr. Augustus violated the confidence imposed in them. During the five years in which he has extended his labors to the Municipal Court, he has bailed 159 males and 138 females. Total amount of bail $42,350. A considerable number of the persons bailed in this Court were vagrant boys ; these he provided with good situations, and the most of them give fair promise of being worthy men. Only one solitary instance of forfeiture of recognisance at this Court has occurred—that of a female for whom he was surety in the sum of one hundred dollars.

CONGRESS. During the past week, the subject of abolishing slavery in the Disrict of Columbia, has engrossed most of the time. The House has instructed a committee to consider the subject.

The members from slave holding states have held caucuses and show bad feelings. It will not amount to any thing of a serious nature.

Professor Espy, under the direction of the Secretary of the navy, is to superintend an extensive system of meteological observations for the Regents of the Smithsonian Institute.

The Bounty Lands claimed by soldiers in the Mexican war will exceed fourteen millions of acres valued by the government at $18,000,000.

☞ The most prolific source of disease is undoubtedly impurity of blood. And to it no people are more subject than those of this country, from the plentiful and comparatively luxurious diet in which their prosperity enables them to indulge. To purify the blood, and relieve the bowels from the unhealthy state produced by that impurity, Brown's Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters are extremely well calculated. They will eradicate those impure humors which are the source of so much uneasiness to the system, and occasion such deformity when they make their appearance exteriorly. The demand for the above Bitters is rapidly increasing in all places where they have been sold, and there is scarcely a day passes but we have some ordered by our first physicians, for dyspepsia, indigestion, weakness of the stomach and limbs, costiveness, general debility, rheumatism, etc. In fact there is not the least doubt but they are the best alterative now in use for a disordered system. The vegetables that these Bitters are mainly composed of are too well known to have the least said in their favor. Remember in all cases when you purchase Brown's Sarsaparilla and Tomato Bitters, to see that the Directions are signed by the proprietor, F. BROWN, in his hand writing, without which none are genuine.

A CERTIFICATE from Mr. Ingerson of Lancaster, New Hampshire, a highly respectable citizen of that place, and Jailer of the County of Coos :

I, George W. Ingerson, of Lancaster, hereby certify, that I have been troubled with the Asthma for about twenty years. Last November, when I began taking Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I had been unable to do any thing for several months, and had not, except a very few nights, been able to rest in my bed Almost as soon as I began to take it, I felt relieved. I have taken about two bottles My health is altogether improved. A few returns of the Asthma which I have had in that time, were almost immediately removed by taking the Balsam. I rest well, and my health is and has been for months, better than at any time previous for many years. I recommend this medicine to all who are similarly afflicted.

A sure cure for Dyspepsia and Costiveness.

HARRISON'S PERISTALTICS have had 12 years' trial by the Medical faculty and the public generally. This medicine is in Lozenges, pleasant to the taste, and may be given to children. The Peristaltics are gently laxative, and by their tonic qualities improve the digestive organs and invigorate the whole system They cure Costiveness, Headache, Dizziness, Sleepiness, Jaundice, Oppression after Eating, Liver Complaint, Diarrhœa, Piles, Dropsy, Debility, Faintness, Weak Stomach, Heartburn, Palpitation, Rheumatism, Pains in the Bones, Scrofula, Tic Douleroux, Worms, etc, etc

These Lozenges are excellent in all Nervous complaints and Dyspeptic symptoms, Female Suppressions and Irregularities, especially in the young This medicine contains no preparation of Mercury whatever, and no ingredient which may not safely be given to the most delicate female and under any circumstances.

This preparation is also put up in bottles for seafaring persons, who should always have a supply. An occasional use of the Peristaltics prevents Fevers, Bilious complaints, and chronic or East India Diarrhœa. They are admirably adapted to the complaints incident to the coast of Africa, Sumatra, West Indies and South America.

These Lozenges are recommended by some of the best Physicians in Boston, who use them in their families and general practice All afflicted with oppression after eating, or rising of food will find great relief. They are the best medicine for children known.

Christmas and New Year's

AT THE

QUINCY BOOKSTORE.

ON the return of the festive season of CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR, we again ask your attention to the extensive preparations we have made to meet the wants of this community. No pains have been spared in selecting, in order to present to your notice an ELEGANT AND BEAUTIFUL variety of

BOOKS & FANCY GOODS,

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTS.

We have as usual the new volumes of the favorite Annuals,—Friendship's Offering, Rose of Sharon, Christian Keepsake, Amulet, Garland, Keepsake of Friendship, Amaranth, Lady's Annual, and others,—which appear this season with increased beauty ; but we have, also, bound in the same beautiful Annual style, exactly suited for GIFTS, the works of Coleridge, Byron, Miss Mitford, Howitt, Moore, Cowper, and other standard works, (which of course cannot be enumerated in this advertisement,) which are not in miniature, but in octavo form; with PLATES, and CLEAR, LARGE TYPE, being ENTIRELY NEW, and

NEVER BEFORE OFFERED IN THIS MARKET.

ALSO, we have (and this will be particularly pleasing to the younger portion of the community) taken especial care to provide ourselves with nearly an entire new collection of

JUVENILE AND TOY BOOKS.

In this department we have always been able to give satisfaction, but we shall present UNUSUAL ATTRACTION this season, having disposed of much of our old stock and replenished with that which is new and beautiful. We trust that all who have young friends whom they are desirous to please will duly notice this.

We are also provided with a large assortment of BIBLES, some in new styles of binding, appropriate to the season,

MINIATURE VOLUMES OF POEMS, &c.,

in almost endless variety, with a general assortment of

BEAUTIFULLY BOUND & ILLUSTRATED BOOKS,

in the various departments of literature.

Our stock of FANCY GOODS, TOYS, &c., has been enlarged by recent purchases, embracing many articles new, beautiful and appropriate.

All we ask of those who are desirous of obtaining something for a memento or love token, on this occasion, is this—that they will favor us with a call, and if they really wish to purchase, the fault will not be ours if they do not, most entirely to their satisfaction.

C. GILL & Co.,

Quincy, December 16, 1848. 3w Hancock St., Quincy.

Notice.

POETRY.

SONG OF STEAM.

Harness me down with your iron bands,
Be sure of your curb and rein,
For I scorn the strength of your puny hands,
As the tempest scorns a chain:
How I laughed as I lay concealed from sight,
For many a countless hour,
At the childish boast of human might,
And the pride of human power!

When I saw an army upon the land,
A navy upon the seas,
Creeping along, a snail like band,
Or waiting a wayward breeze,
When I marked the peasant faintly reel,
With the toil which he faintly bore,
As he turned in the tardy wheel,
Or tugged at the weary oar,—

When I measured the panting courser's speed,
The flight of the carrier dove,
As they bore a law a king decreed,
Or the lines of impatient love;
I could not but think how the world would feel
As these were outstripped afar,
When I should be bound to the rushing keel,
Or chained to the flying car!

Ha! ha! ha! They found me at last;
They invited me forth at length;
And I rushed to my throne with a thunder blast,
And laughed in my iron strength!
Oh! then ye saw a wonderous change,
On the earth and ocean wide,
Where now my fiery armies range,
Nor wait for wind or tide

Hurrah! hurrah! the water's o'er,
The mountain's steep decline;
Time—space have yielded to my power—
The world—the world is mine!
The giant streams of the queenly West,
And the Orient floods divine.

The ocean pales where'er I sweep
To hear my strength rejoice,
And the monsters of the briny deep,
Cower trembling at my voice
I carry the wealth and the lord or earth;
The thoughts of the godlike mind,
The wind lags after going forth,
The lightning is left behind.

In the darksome depths of the fathomless mine,
My tireless arm doth play,
Where the rocks ne'er saw the sun's decline,
Or the dawn of the glorious day.
I bring earth's glittering jewels up,
From the hidden caves below,
And I make the fountain's granite cup
With a crystal gush o'erflow!

I blow the bellows, I forge the steel,
In all the shops of trade;
I hammer the ore, and turn the wheel,
Where my arms of strength are made,
I manage the furnace, the mill, the mint—
I carry, I spin, I weave;
And all my doings I put in print,
On every Saturday eve.

I've no muscle to weary, no breast to decay,
No bones to be "laid on the shelf,"
And soon I intend you may "go and play,"
While I manage the world myself.
But harness me down with your iron bands,
Be sure of your curb and rein;
For I scorn the strength of your puny hands,
As the tempest scorns the chain!

ANECDOTES.

During the flour excitement some time since, an exceedingly important and dandified cockney made his appearance at the office of one of the heaviest produce commission merchants in New York and inquired if they sold flowa.

'Yes sir,' said the merchant, 'we deal in flour.'

'Ah—aw—I only want to pro-cu-a waxy small lot—some fifteen or twenty thousand barrels.'

'Oh, only twenty thousand barrels. I'm very sorry I can't accommodate you, but we never retail flowa; our clerks, however, may have fifteen or sixteen thousand barrels, sweepins of the stowas, that they would dispose of—here, John, step this way.

Our transatlantic friend vamosed.

A young lady in the habit of putting on a gread deal too much rouge, with too little care and art, was lately boasting that she owed what color she had to her custom of washing her face in water; but perceiving some little hesitation or astonishment in the company she said to a gentleman, 'you don't seem to believe me.' 'Oh madam,' said he, 'I have not the least doubt—it as very clear you wash in the red sea.'

A gentleman expatiated on the justice and propriety of hereditary nobility. 'Is it not right,' said he, 'in order to hand down to posterity the virtues of those who have been eminent for their services to the country, that their posterity should enjoy the honors conferred on them as a reward for such services?' 'By the same rule,' said a lady, 'if a man is hanged for his misdeeds, all his posterity should be hanged too!'

A student of Yale, being confined to his room by sickness, was called upon by a friend

'What, John' said the visitor, 'sick, eh?'

'Yes' answered John, 'Sic sum.'

Another meeting a member of his society, asked him what was the next subject for debate?

'Oh, a capital one.'

'Indeed, what is it?'

'Capital Punishment.'

'Oh, you mean a pun I suppose?'

'No indeed, no pun-ish ment!'

A testy old gentleman was incessantly pestered by his neighbors, with inquiries after his health. At last losing all patience with the most assidnous of these enquirers, 'Tell your master,' said he to a servant, 'with my compliments, that I am pretty well this morning and shall continue so for twenty mornings to come.'

A number of gentlemen being out on a boating excursion, it was remarked by one of the party that Jack H——, was the best rower among them. 'Yes,' replied another, 'Jack is the noblest rowman of them all.'

Some one who had been praised by one he did not like, said 'I wish I could return the compliment.' 'You might, and lie as I did,' was the reply.

There's no mistake about it.
What e'er our state in life may be,
Of very high or low degree,
'Tis clear, and none will doubt it,
That to progress we must possess
A good appearance in our dress,—
There 's no mistake about it.

A good appearance clears the way
Where higher talents meet delay,
When struggling on without it;
A good appearance will obtain
What years of toil would scarcely gain,—
There 's no mistake about it.

Then 'tis important unto those
Who would obtain good Genteel Clothes,
To think at once about it:
And if they would the neatest choose,
Go straight to RUSSELL S—no time loose,—
There 's no mistake about it.

RUSSELL'S Garments are superbly made,
The best and cheapest in the trade,
A fact, and none will doubt it;
Clothes at RUSSELL'S are secured
At half the price elsewhere procured,
And no mistake about it.

The Graefenberg Company,

HEREBY give notice that their New England Branch is established at No 154 Washington Street, Boston, the Secretary of which is Mr. Edwin C. Barnes, who is prepared to appoint Sub-Agents for the sale of their celebrated MEDICINES
Application should be made either personally, or by mails post paid. The Graefenberg Series of Medicines consists of the following preparations—to which public attention is invited, viz:
THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS, which are inconceivably superior to any ever before discovered. All Chronic Diseases, Bilious and Bowel Complaints, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Fever and Ague, Headache, Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, all Stomach Complaints, Green Sickness, etc, etc, yield at once to these Pills. They purge away offensive humors, arrest the progress of disease, and at the same time restore tone and vigor to the system. In cases of general derangement of the health, they are SOVEREIGN. Price 25 cents per box.
The GRAEFENBERG CHILDREN'S PANACEA. This is a Medicine which should be in every family. In all diseases to which children and youth are subject, and for Summer Complaints, Dysentery, and all other affections of the stomach and bowels it is infallible. Price 50 cents a bottle.
THE GREEN MOUNTAIN VEGETABLE OINTMENT. This is an Indian remedy, the receipt for which was obtained by one of the early settlers of Vermont from the Indians. It is an invaluable dressing for Burns and Scalds, and by its use all bruises and fresh cut wounds are cured with great rapidity. Price 25 and 50 cents a box.
The GRAEFENBERG SARSAPARILLA COMPOUND This unequalled extract is immeasurably superior to any Sarsaparilla preparation now offered to the public One bottle of it is warranted to make two quarts of the strength ordinarily sold. Price one dollar a bottle.
The Graefenberg EYE LOTION, which for disorders of the Eyes has no equal; for violent inflammation, weakness, or foreign substances in the eye, it is a positive and speedy cure Price 25 cents a bottle.
The Graefenberg HEALTH BITTERS. These Bitters stimulate the stomach, promote tardy digestion, impart tone and elasticity to the feeble body, and exert their salutary energies with surprising rapidity. Price 25 cents a package.
